DELANO DIARY.

—The Catholics had English preaching at their church here on Sunday evening last.

—Several of our correspondents communications have been crowded out this week.

—Mrs. Conroy who is quite sick has been moved to Mrs. Roehl's where she will be taken care of.

—The Catholic congregations here have been observing the forty hours devotion this week.

—Services at the M. E. Church on Sabbath evening was well attended. Rev. Campbell opened with prayer and Rev. Davies preached.

—Rev. H. A. Noyes, of Buffalo, will preach at the Presbyterian church in Delano on Sunday, April 3, at 3 P. M. The people are cordially invited to attend the service.

—The Minneapolis Brewing Company are having their storehouse at this place painted railroad red. Al Davis and Gus Kruger are the artists which will insure a good job.

—Miss Mabel Parsons last week completed a successful term of school in the Borke district by giving with the assistance of her pupils a splendid exhibition.

—On Wednesday while Len Dedrick, Val Guggemas and Fritz Renike were crossing Buffalo Lake on their way to Dedrick's farm, Fritz Reinke broke thaough the ice and was drowned. Teams had crossed the lake on Monday.

—On Sabbath morning Rev. William Campbell preached a very impressive sermon at the Presbyterian church. Being a service in memory of the late little Irene Frazee as well as the pastor's farewell to his flock at this place served to make the occasion one of unusual solemnity.

—We are informed that our neighboring town of Greenwood is troubled with a dearth of office seekers and that there are more offices than officers. The town clerk, 2 justices, 2 constables and 2 road overseers offices being left vacant. M. Conzet has been appointed to the office of clerk. Delano might supply them with plenty of timber if they will call on her.

—C. M. Conzet and Leon Frazee have purchased, for a fancy price, a running mare that has won some lively races in the east and also in California. Her last winning is said to have been with Jimmie Sheldon, of San Francisco, time 1:27½, after which she took cold and had the lung fever. She is now getting ready for the track again and her new owners propose to see what's in her as soon as the mud dries up a little.

—Thomas F. O'Hair, a former resident of Delano, on his way to the convention at St. Paul, on Tuesday afternoon was interviewed by several old acquaintances while the train stopped here. In answer to an inquiry after his family he astonished the bystanders by the announcement that he had three children; twins, a boy and a girl three months old, and another one. T. K. Danforth congratulated him and said, "I am a twin myself."

—On Tuesday evening, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, Peter Peterson was agreeably surprised at his father's house a mile east of town, while visiting with a friend in an upper room of the house where he had been enticed and forced to remain for the purpose, by hearing his fellow band boys who had quietly assembled under him strike up a lively tune. The occasion of their visit was the celebration of Peter's 20th birthday. An enjoyable time was had by all present.

—Recorder Hitz informs us that the plat of the street grading made years ago is now in his hands. Before spring work begins it is hoped a new survey will be made and that it will be followed. The old one was lost from sight for several years and the streets show the result. Several new houses are to be built, fences, sidewalks and other improvements to be made and several parties are anxiously waiting for the establishing of a grade. Our village would be much improved in appearance besides traveling would be much more easily done if the streets and sidewalks were graded as they ought to be.

County Cullings.

Among Wright County visitors at the State Convention on Thursday were W. J. Walsh and C. H. Cullen of Waverly John O'Leory and Issac Podas of Buffalo and Dr. Catlin of Delano.

From the Litchfield News Ledger we learn that W. H. Hellen formerly of the Buffalo Journal has been fined $500 and costs at that place, for collecting for the Detroit Free Press and not forwarding the amounts collected.

The Hon. A. Y. Eaton informed us last Saturday that he did not write the poetry at the head of his local columns, but that the "Devil did. There is nothing like being honest and giving the "devil" his due. We had suspected Brother Eaton was at least the medium through which the lines found their way before the public gaze.

Marth's Culvert.

In last week's Eagle the old bird comes out and makes another attack on that culvert at C. Marth's He says over $800. did that culvert cost over a dry creek. It seems that the Eagle was misinformed by his pet crank, for when the culvert was let and the size of it was cut down from 10 to 6 feet in width he made the remark that if he had land on the other side of the road he would at once sue the town as that culvert was too small for the water that had to go through, and now the Eagle says over that dry creek.

Now I don't believe that either the Eagle or his advisor would know a culvert from a hog trough unless they saw the pork around the latter.

As to the cost he says it could have been built for half its cost. That would be $317 (as I received $634). The material on the ground cost $354. That would have left me $39 in the hole besides doing the work. Wonder whether our friend (?) Ign. figures that way. It seems not, not if we can credit that road petition deal and as to the durability I will say that it will stand there and be a culvert to the men that built it when our friend (?) Ign. and his ill advisor will long be under the sod. Now old bird the next time you have anything to say about that culvert you want to post yourself and don't let everybody know that you are in the habit of not telling the truth.

Boycotts.

MR. EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE, Dear Sir,—My attention was called to an item in the Waverly Tribune of the issue of March 17, '92, which refered to what the editor was pleased to term a boycott of the Montrose business men. Knowing something of the state of things in Montrose, and fearing lest a false impression should gain a foothold among the readers of the Tribune, I ask for a short space in your columns in which to say a word in defense of the so called boycotters.

Says the Tribune, "No boycott should be established against an American citizen for voting his principles." We endorse this in a general way. But there are circumstances in this case to be considered.

1. Can a man be said to vote for principle when he himself declares the inducement to be a matter of dollars and cents?

We call this, not principle, but policy. Now is any community called upon to support any set of men who are bent on a selfish policy, only?

That selfpreservation is the first law of nature, nobody will dispute. Now if, for a selfish policy, a man will vote away another man's liberty, property and home, is the injured person to embrace the offender and show a spirit of thankfulness for the injustice done him? We wonder what the Tribune, so situated, would do.

2. But, we suppose, the Tribune will insist upon calling the actions refered to, principle and not policy. Very well. If the line of action is from principle it is from a wrong principle. Because a man who will vote or work for an unmitigated evil can not do so from a right principle. A wrong principle is contrary to the spirit of our government and unworthy of support. The "boycotters" of Montrose feel it to be as bad to support the supporters of the principle (?) as the principle itself.

3. We believe the "boycotters" have taken their position, not so much because of the way the men cast their ballots as because of the spirit shown.

For instance they do not feel called upon to deal with a man who will vote to reduce his own tax to the amount of 5 to 6 dollars and by so doing sacrifice the good of the whole community beside.

Again they do not feel called upon to support a man who is in favor of a saloon in order to get persons intoxicated so that they could not discern when they were being overcharged on the articles they were buying.

We ask the Tribune, are such principles worthy of support?

We do not believe in boycotts; we do favor selfprotection against moral as well as physical harm. It sometimes takes severe lessons to teach a man to exercise his "birthright" so as not to conflict with that of some one else. We hope this lesson may be soon learned by all—that while a man is responsible to "no selfconstituted committee or body of citizens," yet he is responsible to the whole body and must use his "sovereignty" for the good of all.

Respectfully yours,

REV. J. R. DAVIES

DELANO March 30, '92.

Town Affairs.

EDITOR GAZETTE—One thing the publishing of the treasurer's statement of the town of Franklin brought about and it is this, that it put a stop to the crazy ravings of the Buzzard about the squandering of thh surplus by the board of supervisors of last year. Yes it is a stunner, not alone to him but also to his insignificant tale bearers.

Two bridges (put up at a cost of $1000.00) voted by the annual town meeting without an extra dollar of tax voted, and the surplus of $857.00 reduced to $555.00. Nine out of ten and the old S. P. himself would not have left a dollar in the treasury. For reference see Delano school District management.

And now another subject and allow me to talk in riddles:

Of course I was Chairman of the board in 1885, I was running the business all myself. Hoar, Lammers, Peterson and Wier were only there to draw their pay and mileage. That W. J. Booth bill was not sent weeks before the meeting opened when as in a former communication I said it was by an error of the board allowed. J. N. Stacy, the county auditor, did not carefully look the bill over as he was ordered by the board to do, of all stationery and blanks for the use of county officers. W. J. Booth's catalogue was not misplaced by some one, to give members of the board a chance to scrutenize the bill. I, as chairman, of course must have made the motion to allow the bill. I must have seconded the motion also, the other members could hardly be considered anything else but mere ciphers. In the twinkling of an eye J. N. Stacy made out and delivered the order to David Cochran, contrary to law of course, but of course J. N. knew it all: that law was not for J. N. and a day or two later the Ch. st. pt. got onto it. See! what a mean detestible game.

Before closing I will mention yet, and not in riddles, David Cochran and W. J. Booth showed themselves as men when they found out a mistake had been made, the county did not lose anything by it. But my man threatens to sue the town for the road petition blanks and I will say go in with all your might. I'll be with you.

INDEPENDENCE.

The signs of the times indicate there is a falling away of the faith once delivered to the people of this country by their Revolutionary fathers. They have departed from the true faith and have become worshipers of idols and from a bibical standpoint it looks as if the consummation of all things were drawing nigh. This might be called the modern Goshen. There the children of Isreal in ancient times fed their flocks until they sold themselves into Egyptian bondage and were servants unto that people. 400 years they gathered straw and made brick. And is it a thing impossible while the Nebuchadnezzar of this country has set up an image of gold whose heigth and breadth is not measured by cubits but by the sweat of the toiling masses. That we too should fall away and become serfs and slaves to a people that we knew not when in our own land. We are in need of a reformation. The people are asking it and they demand it, and in the language of John Adams I say, "Let it come, I repeat it let it come."

Wheat, 70 cents per bushel and the Russians are starving by thousands.

Eggs, 8 cents per dozen and the hens cannot pay running expenses. Where is your reciprocity and your McKinley bill? Dig yourself out from under the oppreasor's hand and show to the world that we are an independent people governed by the ballot and not by kings and money lords. Surely we are a great people.

Soon the farmer will go forth to scatter the seed upon the ground trusting in Providence and to the former and latter rains for an abundant harvest from which over sixty million people in this country must be clothed and fed. Let us be thankful then that we are not as the Russians and praise the giver of all good for witholding the blight and curse from the land of our adoption.

Mr. Editor I can not further infringe upon time, the rooster is crowing for six o'clock and business must come to a stop.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

World's Fair Notes.

Bulgaria has decided to participate n the Exposition. Foreign participation, so far as ascertained up to the present, embraces seventy-two nations and provinces.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union wants to put up a building, 70x 100 feet, in the Exposition grounds, in which to exhibit the entire system of its work and to conduct a cafe for the sale of Temperance drinks.

The Exposition authorities are anxious that all of the States and Territories which intend to erect buildidgs at the Exposition, and which have not yet submitted plans for approval, do so at the earliest possible moment. Very soon a time will be specified beyond which plans will not be accepted. May 1 is the date likely to be chosen. The demand for space is so great that delinquent states are liable to lose the sites that have been assigned to them.

Five acres of space in the Midway Plaisance have been reserved for a nursery exhibit.

The Maryland World's Fair Board is planning to show in the Maryland building a reproduction of the surrender of his commission by George Washington. The report of the Board to the legislature asking for an appropriation of $100,000 states: "It has been suggested by His Excellency the Governor, and the suggestion has met with much favor, that the old Senate Chamber of the State House be reproduced in our building, and that a group of 32 figures be made to represent the surrendering by Washington of his commission, which took place in that historic hall. Such a tableau would attract many visitors and serve as a feature of great interest. The act is almost unique in the history of the world—a successful general, in the flush of victory, laying down his sword and retiring to the duties of a homely quiet life after vanquishing the greatest power on earth in a long and bloody war—and is something to be admired as well as wondered at, and every son of our grand old Commonwealth should feel a personal pride when he thinks that a deed so noble was done on the soil of his native State, beneath the roof of his State Capitol."

TO TELL AGE OF HORSES.

To tell the age of any horse,
Inspect the lower jaw, of course;
The sixth front tooth the tale will tell,
And every doubt and fear dispel.

The two middle "nippers" you behold
Before the colt is two weeks old:
Before eight weeks two more will come;
Eight months the "corners" cut the gum.

The outside grooves will disappear
From middle two in just one year;
In two years from the second pair;
In three the corners, too, are bare.

At two the middle "nippers" drop;
At three the second pair can't stop:
When four years old the third pair goes;
At five a full new set he shows.

The deep black spots will pass from view,
At six years from the middle two;
The second pair at seven years;
At eight the spot each "corner" clears.

From middle "nippers," upper jaw,
At nine the black spots will withdraw;
The second pair at ten are white;
Eleven finds the "corners" light.

As time goes on the horse men know,
The oval teeth three sided grow;
They longer get, project before
Till twenty, when we know no more

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

NEWS from Rhode Island is that the Republicans have succeeded in getting a small majority of the votes.

THE wheat investigating committee has, at last, completed its task and the report has been filed with the governor.

EX GOVERNOR MCGILL has announced his willingness to accept a nomination for Governor on the Republican ticket. He would like to have some of the wrongs done him righted. Correct.

THE Republican papers appear quite anxious to have the Democrats and Alliance parties form a fusion. Of course it would give them a better chance to work some of their disaffected back into the ranks of the G. O. P.

THE House passed the Springer Free Wool bill yesterday, by a vote of 194 yeas to 60 nayes. The names of our Minnesota Congressmen Castle, Hall, Harries and Halverson appear among the yeas, but we failed to find John Lind on either side.

The Campaign.

The Presidential campaign of 1892, which is, from the present outlook, to become one of the most hotly contested ever known in this country, has already been opened in earnest. Although the candidates for President have not yet been selected for a certainty it is pretty definitely understood that Grover Cleveland and Benjamin Harrison will be the men to head the tickets of the two leading parties. Rhode Island the smallest of the States of the Union is the battle ground on which the first great battle of the ballots has already been fought. The heaviest guns of both armies were in the field. Tom Reed and Gov. McKinley, with a letter from James G. Blaine were arrayed against Grover Cleveland and Ex-Governor Campbell. The preliminaries were looked to in dead earnest and the bone of contention, the Tariff Reform question was handled in the most skillful manner. Rhode Island being one of the important manufacturing centers of our country, would be expected to lean toward protective tariff if anybody did.

Don't Favor Fusion.

From the tone of the following article clipped from The Alliance Standard, of Willmar, we infer that the People's Party are not all in favor of fusion:

As the time of holding political conventions draw near every element is being canvassed by the old parties. They have plenty of dissention within their own ranks and perhaps they are so busy mending the obvious rents that they have no time to scan the condition of the Alliance. At any rate they no longer tell us that the Alliance has gone to pieces. In fact they speak of it with becoming respect. Of course both the old parties claim that they can find a basis of fusion with the Alliance or People's party. If they can they fail to make it manifest. No stronger proof of the real strength and independence of the People's party could be given than that its sworn enemies, the Republicans and Democrats, are quarreling for the opportunity of making advances toward a reconciliation. Their advances will be ignored, however, the People's party is no longer a theoretical quantity. It is a real, living issue. The men who compose the People's party are they who have investigated the claims of the old parties. They found absolutely no hope of reform from them, so they organized the People's party, with a platform of principles upon which any American citizen may be proud to stand. The two old party Goliah's realize the danger of this new David, strong in the might conferred by right principles, and already they are seeking to evade the result which the counting of the ballots will show. They have sowed the wind, and if they reap the whirlwind, they have nobody to blame but themselves.

TARIFF REFORM.

The Shiboleth of True Democracy.

Grover Cleveland met with one of the grandest receptions ever given a public man, at Providence, R. I. where he delivered one of his characteristic speeches a few extracts from which we give below:

"I have found it impossible to decline the invitation you sent me to meet here today the Democracy of Rhode Island. I have come to remind you that the intrenchments of spoils and patronage cannot avail against the valor and determination of right; that corruption and bribery cannot smother and destroy the aroused conscience of our countrymen, and that splendid achievements await those who travel honestly and stubbornly fighting in the people's cause.

"Let us not for a moment miss the inspiration of those words, 'the people's cause.' They signify the defense of the rights of every man, rich or poor, in every corner of our land, who by virtue of simple American manhood lays claim to the promises of our free government, and they mean the promotion of the welfare and happiness of the humblest American citizen who confidingly invokes the protection of just and equal laws.

"The covenant of our Democratic faith, as I understand it, exacts constant effort in this cause, and its betrayal I conceive to be a crime against the creed of true Democracy.

"The struggle in which you are engaged arrests the attention of your party in every state, and they pause in their preparation for the general engagement near at hand, in which all will be in the field, and look toward Rhode Island with hope and trust.

"They read the legends on your banners, and they heard your rallying cries, and know that your fight is in the people's cause. If you should be defeated, there will be no discouragement in the vast waiting army, but you will earn their plaudits and cover yourselves with glory by winning success.

"Large and bright upon your banners are blazoned 'Tariff Reform,' The Shibboleth of True Democracy, and the test of loyalty to the people's cause."

[Last week's items]

Old settlers say the roads have not been so bad for a number of years as they have been this week.

Rev. C. H. Davis delivered his lecture on "Home, Sweet Home" to a small but appreciative audience at the M. E. Church Monday evening. It was very interesting and well rendered.

The school children are preparing to give an entertainment in the near future.

Wm. Haggerty and wife came down from Annandale Saturday and visited relatives and friends in this vicinity. Will was shaking hands with friends in Rockford Sunday.

Chas. Pitt and family visited relatives here the first of the week.

Among the Delanoites who took the train for the county seat Wednesday were Len Dedrick, Jno. Lohmiller and Dr. Shrader.

Rockford will make $500. worth of improvements in the village soon. They intend to grade and build sidewalks. The village officers seem to have found some mud this spring. The improvements are much needed.

Mr. Benner has again postponed his auction for a few weeks until the roads are better and seeding is about over. They sold two horses by auction last Saturday but as the bidding was not very lively they will sell the others in about a month.

INDEPENDENCE.

"And Nathaniel said unto him 'can any good thing come out of Nazareth?' Philip saith unto him 'come and see.'"

The Independence and Rockford A. C. church is not dead as some people suppose but still liveth. Out from under every cloud comes a lining of light For many years Independence has been well supplied with church priveleges and it is still the intention of the good people of Indepeadence to have those church priveleges continue. Many years have elapsed since Elder O. R. Fasset tnd wife established the first one in this part of the country and out from under it have sprung up other branches by O. R. Fassett's labors. We may not flourish like the young bay tree but we intend to flourish all the same.

Independence is a border town belonging to Hennepin county. Minneapolis being the metropolis, where we go once every year to pay tribute, not to Caesar but to the money lords, Shylocks and a court house commission. We have a fine loamy soil well adapted for the raising of all kinds of grain, vegetables, etc., and some people are always raising Cain. We have several houses of worship, seven school houses, two postoffices, two stores of general merchandise, two blacksmith shops but am sorry to say we have no proffessional men such as doctors, lawyers and ministers. When we are in need of one of those we import one from some neighboring town or village. This does very well except sometimes the duty comes high. Sometimes one of our own justices of the peace marries a couple when they are in a hurry and can not wait for an imported minister.

It is expected W. J. Burchell and Elder Polard, of Minneapolis, will preach occasionally for the Independence and Rockford A. C. churches until we are supplied.

The A. C. church at Armstrong is about finished and will be dedicated on Easter Sunday, April 17th, at 10:30 in the forenoon.

From the indications now our spring will not be very early after all. Farmers will not be able to do any seeding for some time yet. The rain on Monday has made the roads impassible again.

Sugar making does not come along yet, hardly think it will amount to much, is getting too late.

See by last week's Christian Herald, New York, that the famine is still raging in Russia. It is too bad that these poor people have to suffer when there is enough and to spare. We should be thankful that we are not subjected to famine or any of the Egyptian pestilences.

Mrs. Henry Fogleman is on the sick list.

Miss Rilla Hoisington has got the measels. Our town has been well patronized by the measels and mumps dur the last winter and spring.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

ORONO-1855-6.

Other parties settling within the present limits of Orono in 1855, whose names have not yet appeared were: Franklin N. Fleming and James N. Dudley, who were associtiated with Wayzata, held claims for a time near Long Lake, relinquishing them later to settlers who have already been mentioned, and William A. Spafford (in a former issue this name was erroneously given as "Stafford") who bought the claim of Stephen Bean and lived there till 1856, when he sold to Isabella Gilfillan, who pre-empted the place, upon which Spafford purchased the pre-empted claim of John Matteson now the lands of Geo. H. Smith and C. W. Weeks.

The following parties, although minors at the time (1855) when their parents settled within the present limits of Orono were old enough to participate in some of the experiences of their families in pioneering, namely: Robert, David and Herbert Archibald and their sisters Mrs. Robert Coffin and Mrs. Taylor Archibald were children of Wm. Archibald; Selden, Madison, Addison, John and Wilber Coleman were sons of John A. Coleman; Elbridge and Mellen Barnes were sons of Sheppard Barnes; James Turnham and his sisters Mrs. Fleming and Mrs. Milton Stubbs were children of Edwin Turnham; Jonathan, Charles, Mary Ann (Mrs. Parker), Rachel (Mrs. Hilton, deceased), Ruth (Mrs. Brooks) were children of Allen Grave.

Events of 1856. The first white child born within the limits of Orono and Medina, was Emma, the daughter of George and Delilah Maxwell, and now the wife of Mellen Smith. She was born in January 1856.

Settlers of 1856 were: Issac Shartle and family and Mrs. Isabella Gilfillan, of Clark Co., Ohio, these parties being acquaintances of Robert H. Knettle. Shartle bought Evan Templin's land now the premises of J. H. Winslow and Mrs. Gilfillan bought Wm. A. Spafford's land, which embraced lands now owned by Anna Bennett, Wm. Smith and Wm. Guise, about the same time Henry Stubbs and family of which Nathan, Milton, Rolla, Anna Stubbs and Mrs. Rachel Talbert were members, settled on land adjoining that of Allen Grave, Charles W. Gordon and family of which Mrs. Wm. G. White was a member and Gibson Teas and wife with his only son, C. O. Teas, now of Mayer Station, settled on land which he purchased of Allen Grave. Grave, Stubbs, and Teas were from Richmond, Indiana, where they were members of the Friends or Quaker society, but about the time of their migration to Minnesota, they became interested in spiritualism, adhering more closely to the latter faith than the former after coming to Minnesota.

In 1855, George Knettle, of Pennsylvania, visited his nephews, Robert and Joseph Knettle and during his sojourn became favorably impressed with the country, and decided to obtain a considerable quantity of Big Woods land, erect a steam sawmill, and locate permanently. Land then, was obtainable only under the pre-emption law or by purchase from settlers who had proven up and made final entry under that statute, and there being then but few settlers who had obtained titles to their lands, and they being enthusiastic over their prospects were indifferent about selling, so Mr. Knettle found the matter of obtaining land attended with much difficulty. The pre-emption law being intended to secure actual settlement of lands, permitted but one entry of 160 acres to every citizen, under certain conditions, amongst which were, actual settlement on land accompanied with improvements sufficient for a habitation and a residence of a certain period, and requiring on proving up a declaration on the part of the pre-emptor or settler, under oath, that he had no arrangement or bargain by which any one outside of himself should obtain all or any part of the land. Knettle returned to Pennsylvania with the idea of disposing of his property there and bringing his family to Minnesota and inaugurating his enterprise, following which several attempts were made to jump claims of parties who were supposed to have taken them in the interest of Knettle, the bona fide settlers however aided in driving off the jumpers, following which those pre-emptions were compled and in due time Knettle obtained the title to the land.

In the fall of 1856 Knettle erected his sawmill, which was operated that winter by his nephew, Robert Knettle and in the spring of 1857 he brought in his family and settled on the land where the sawmill was located, which is now the premises of Jacob Hursh. Knettle having also in contemplation the matter of laying out a townsite in connection with his steam saw, named his place Cumberland City in honor of his native county in Pennsylvania. The premises being at a convenient point on the Minneapolis and Watertown road, Knettle entertained the traveling public, designating his hotel as the Cumberland House. There was considerable lumber manufactured at the place for the inhabitants of the surrounding country, the sawmill rendering more benefit to the latter perhaps than remuneration to the proprietors. Old settlers will recall with considerable humor the term "Eucherville" being a nickname applied to Cumberland City suggested by the several attempts at claim jumping at that place. The townsite was never laid out and its proposed name as well as its nickname exist only in the memory of old settlers today.

NEW YORK is the leading Irish city in the world in point of population. Dublin contains 254,000 human souls, and New York claims to have 300,000 Irish citizens.

A PROJECT for the settlement of 500 Russo-Hebrew families in Winnipeg has been brought before the London Russian-Hebrew committee. It provides for a combination of railroad work with farming.

THE fact that Nebraska now has 5,400 miles of railway, or within 900 of the mileage of all New England, leads the Boston Globe to remark that the once great American desert seems to be moving to the other side of the map.

IT is proposed by the World's fair management that October 12 next be observed as a general holiday in honor of Columbus and that the discovery of America be celebrated in all the schools. A committee of state superintendents has been appointed to further the movement.

IN Peru, the cotton plant rises to the distinction of a tree, instead of the comparatively diminutive shrub which grows in this country. The tree commences bearing when it is two years old, and it continues to bear every year for forty or fifty years.

AT the present time the whole number of double stars known and recorded by astronomers is something over 10,000; far exceeding the total number of stars visible to the naked eye in the entire firmament (about 6,000), and others are being frequently discovered by the great telescopes now in existence.

BLINDNESS reaches the highest point in civilized lands (216 person to 100,000 of population) among the Spaniards, who are brunettes, while it is much smaller in Sweden (91 per 100,000, or less than half), the land of blondes. The United States has the lowest ratio of blind population in the world. Egypt has the highest.

An unpleasant note of preparation for the World's fair comes from Chicago. Nearly one hundred of the local express companies have held a meeting and "all present enthusiastically supported the movement" to charge fifty cents for carting a trunk hereafter instead of the old price, twenty-five cents. The new rate goes into effect at once.

OF the thirteen trees planted by Alexander Hamilton a hundred years ago, one for each of the original thirteen states, the tree representing New York is now the tallest and the one representing Rhode Island the smallest. The trees Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia were shattered by lightning during the war, but are in good condition now.

BARON VON FELDER, of Vienna, has sold his famous collection of butterflies to Lord Rothschild, of London, for $25,000. The baron, who is now seventy-eight years of age, believed that he was too old to care for his collection properly. It is said that Lord Rothschild intends to leave his collection, now the finest in the world, to the British museum when he dies.

KING LEOPOLD, of Belgium, is a remarkable man. While all the other monarchs of Europe are struggling desperately against the encroachments of the people upon the royal prerogatives, Leopold proposes to share the responsibilities of government with his subjects. He asks for a law which shall authorize him to consult with the electors in certain cases, and so obtain the veiws of the people at large.

THE great high bridge of the Southern Pacific railroad over the Pecos river, just west of Shumla, Tex., has attracted the attention of engineers, because it is the third highest bridge in the world and is by several feet the highest in the United States, being twenty-six feet higher than the great viaduct on the New York, Lake Erie & Western railway. The Pecos bridge is 2,180 feet in length and 328 feet above the surface of the stream.

A GENIUS in Syria named Mousa Rhouri has discovered the secret by which the silk worm makes silk. He can make the silk by machinery, without the aid of the silk worm. In this way the cost of making silk can be reduced one-half. A manufactory is to be started in Georgia soon by a Syrian colony. To manufacture silk in this way a large tract of land has been secured on which to plant mulberries, and the emigrants expect soon to make their fortunes.

THE report of exports from Ichong, a large city in China, contains an item of 13,000 pounds of tiger bones, valued at $3,000. Only a Chinese would think of putting tiger bones to any other use than that of fertilizer, but in China tiger bones are used as a medicine. They impart to the invalid some of the tiger's strength. Another item is 9,000 pounds of old deer horns, worth $1,700—another medicinal agency with whose peculiar properties western medical science is not yet acquainted.

THE last census shows, among other surprising things, that there are more than half a million almond trees actually bearing in the United States; that there are hundreds of thousands of bearing cocoanut trees, and that there are more than a quarter of a million olive trees, producing fruit equal to the best Mediterranean varieties. There are more than half a million bearing banana plants, 200,000 bearing lemon trees, 4,000,000 orange trees, and 21,000,000 pineapples. The value of tropical and semi-tropical fruits grown under the American flag is nearly twenty million dollars.

MR. W. C. EDGAR has left London for Russia to arrange for distributing the Missouri's cargo of grain, recently sent from this country to the starving peasants of that country. His plan is to send the grain by river boats to distressed districts quite out of the reach of the railroads, and which have hitherto been unrelieved by assistance sent through official sources. Before carrying out this plan he must first get the grain clear across Russia from Libau to Nishgorod, more than 1,000 miles, and it is not known whether the Russian government will assist him in this, or will even permit it.

OPTION BILL AMENDED.

Prohibitive Taxes Prescribed for Speculative Dealers and Severe Penalties Provided for Evasions.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The house committee on agriculture has formally adopted the report prepared by Mr. Hatch's subcommittee in favor of the anti-option bill. The measure as agreed upon is the Hatch bill with some modifications in line with the suggestions made some time ago by Senator Washburn. The bill does not propose to interfere with future contracts for the delivery of actual products, but it levies a special tax on those dealers in options or futures who at the time of making such contracts or agreements are not the owners of the articles to be sold and delivered, or have not by purchase acquired the right to their future possessions. These dealers are required to pay $1,000 annually as a license fee for conducting their business, and shall also pay the further sum of 5 cents a pound for every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon or other edible product of swine, and the sum of 20 cents a bushel for every bushel of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, grass seeds and flaxseed. Records of these transactions are to be kept by the dealers and by the boards of trade where they may be made, and reports are to be submitted regularly to the commissioner of internal revenue, who will collect the taxes. All dealers in options or futures are to be registered, and all transfers or assignments of contracts shall be in writing and signed in duplicate, with the date and length of the option explicitly stated. False or fraudulent entries are made punishable by a fine of from $1,000 to $20,000, or imprisonment from six months to ten years, or both. Commission merchants who simply desire to conduct a business of making, transferring or assigning future contracts or agreements of the legitimate sort will be required to pay a fee of $2 a year. Failure to make proper reports to the internal revenue department is made punishable by a fine of from $100 to $5,000 The special taxes imposed are to be collected only from such dealers as fail to show possession of the articles alleged to be purchased, either by an affidavit or a warehouse or elevator receipt or a bill of lading. The fact that they shall refuse to furnish this assurance shall be prima facie evidence that the contract or agreement is of the kind upon which special taxes are to be imposed. Attempt at deception under this provision shall render the dealer liable to fine and imprisonment as indicated above.

DUEL OVER A WIDOW.

Two Louisianians Meet on the Field of Honor and One Is Instantly Killed.

NEW ORLEANS, La., April 4.—A duel was fought on Turnbull's island, at the mouth of the Red river, Saturday morning at 8 o'clock between A. Kirk and M. McGowan, both of West Melville, resulting in the latter being instantly killed. The ball penetrated near the left eye and came out close to the right ear. The weapons used were Winchester rifles and the distance 100 yards. Mr. Kirk was seconded by John Butler and McGowan by William Martin. The duelists were placed back to back. At the signal to turn McGowan fired but missed, when his adversary took deliberate aim and sent the bullet on its deadly mission.

The cause of the duel dates back about two years. At that time Kirk was engaged to Miss Nelly Hill. The engagement was broken because of alleged slanders circulated against him by Tobe Powell. Kirk then proposed and was accepted by Mrs. Theig, a wealthy widow. He claims that McGowan revived the old charges against him in order to break this engagement and ingratiate himself with the widow. A challenge followed, was accepted, and resulted in the duel Saturday. Powell challenged Kirk in September, 1890, the challenge being accepted, but the former, at the last moment, backed out.

WHITELAW REID IS HOME.

NEW YORK, April 4.—Whitelaw Reid, United States minister to France, returned from Paris on the steamship La Champagne Sunday morning. Mr. Reid was seen on board the steamer and talked freely concerning international affairs. He had with him the reciprocity and extradition treaties between the United States and France. Speaking of the treaties, Mr. Reid said: "Signing these treaties completes, all but a few details, every matter of negotiation pending between the United States and France. It only remains for the United States and French chamber of deputies to ratify them."

"Has the lifting of the embargo from American pork created an increase in quanity exported?" was asked Mr. Reid.

"It has, doubtless," he replied, "although there has been some complaint about the method of inspection. The fact is there was a great deal of prejudice against this article and the administration in raising the embargo had to encounter strong opposition. To placate this feeling they made the inspection rules very strict. Duties on pork are high, being 200 per cent., but whenever I broached the subject to them I was met with the very reasonable answer that they were only carrying out the system of protection inaugurated by my own government. There is a very strong protection party in France. The French government has made the mistake of endeavoring to reach at one leap what has gradually been building in the United States for nearly a century. For instance they have advanced duties in some cases as high as 400 per cent. without a moment's warning and the result has been to disturb commercial relations. This is especially true as between France and Spain."

COULDN'T GET A DRINK.

NEW YORK, April 4.—It was very difficult Sunday to find a saloon in this city to which admittance could be gained. The few that did remain open had "lookouts" stationed outside and no one who was not very well known could get in. The most frequented places down town were closed tight and men might be seen singly and in groups going from saloon to saloon in search for a drink. It was probably the dryest Sunday New York has ever seen.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The department of state is advised that at present there are seventy Canadian seal poachers in Behring sea, against fifty-one at this time last year.

A LONG DEATH LIST.

The Victims of the Cyclone in Kansas Will Number Sixty or More—Many Persons Injured.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 4.—As the telegraph service is being reestablished through the storm-swept district of Kansas many strange stories are being brought in about the freaks of the wind which caused so much devastation all over the western part of the state. The list of dead and injured is increased with every new report received and it is now estimated that the list of fatalities will reach sixty within the state border, while three are reported killed at Oklahoma.

The following is the estimate placed on the dead and wounded as near as it can be ascertained at this time: South Haven, eight dead and thirty-two injured; Wellington, four dead and twenty-three injured; on farms between these two towns, five dead and nine injured; Towanda, seventeen dead and forty-five wounded; Augusta, seven death and nineteen injured; Homestead, five dead and seven injured; Strong City, two dead and eight wounded; Salina, fifteen injured, three fatally. These towns are the only ones from which anything like a definite report has been obtained, but from meager reports received the dead at other places will make up the estimate of sixty, as stated above.

Butler and Greenwood counties appear to have been the worst victims, as they were in the immediate center of the low atmospheric pressure. From these counties come the stories of the wind's fantastic work. A son of William Eggers, in Butler county, was taken from his father's arms by the force of the wind and dashed against a tree in front of the horrified parents, while the father barely felt the force of the wind.

William Conners and James Horton were driving in a light wagon when the storm approached them, and they whipped their horses into a run to escape. Conners jumped out and ran to the head of the team, when a tornado struck them. The wagon with Horton were blown away and he was killed. The horses and Conners were unhurt, and he says he did not feel the wind at all.

James Wilson, in Greenwood county, was caught up by the tornado, carried through the air and forced against the side of a barn, where a scantling was run through his body. He was pinned to the barn 8 feet from the ground and died in horrible agony.

At Haven River a cow was lifted from the ground and carried to the top of a house and deposited on an angle of the roof so that she could not fall and it was necessary to kill her to get her from her position.

WELLINGTON, Kan., April 4.—The cyclone and waterspout which passed through Sumner county Thursday night was the most destructive in the history of Kansas. The roaring of the wind was heard for miles. Starting at a point eighteen miles southeast of this city, it cut a path of ruin and desolation twenty miles long and one-fourth to one-half a mile wide. Nothing was spared and everything above ground was literally torn to pieces. Trees were torn up by the roots and buildings, live stock and fences were picked up and carried long distances.

At Dalton, 5 miles west of this city, the storm was fiercest. The house of William Little was crushed, he and his four children killed and his wife badly injured. Near by, Samuel Butterworth's house collapsed and he and four members of the family were carried 300 yards and dropped into an orchard. His hip was crushed and his leg broken. His daughter was caught in the timbers of the house but escaped with slight injuries. There were thirteen persons in Joe Showalter's house when it was struck and all were injured. Showalter had a leg broken and other injuries. Mr. Maple and his son, of Portland, were badly injured by the wrecking of their house and the father will die. About fifty persons in all were injured and as yet it is impossible to make any estimate of the damage to property.

WAMEGO, Kan., April 4.—Friday's windstorm passed from the south to the north about 2 miles east of Wamego, and five deaths are so far reported, while one other person, Charles Fowler, will not live. The deaths are Mrs. Albert Eggers and two children, Joseph Johnson and a child of Charles Taylor.

SALINA, Kan., April 4.—Reports from various parts of the country bring news of great disaster caused by the storm Thursday night. The little village of Vine Creek was wiped out. At Smolar ever house is demolished and one child reported killed. Oakville, a small village, is blown away and not a house left standing. Several were injured there but not seriously.

OMAHA, Neb., April 4.—Thirty of the best residences in the town were completely destroyed by Thursday night's cyclone. Almost every house in the north and west part of the town is more or less damaged, and almost every store in the business portion sustained some injury. The damages are $100,000 and probably more. There was not any tornado insurance.

Forced to Suspend.

AKRON, O., April 4.—The fact that A. T. Paige transferred his interest in the Paige block to the Citizens' Savings and Loan association, caused a heavy run on that bank Friday. It was started by ten farmers from Monroe Falls who had heard that the bank had gone to pieces. The report was without the slightest truth, but it was enough to alarm small depositors, who appeared in force on Friday afternoon. The crowd was increased, and the bank officials, for lack of currency, decided to suspend payment on interest-bearing deposits for thirty days. Other banks are not affected.

Small Bills Are Scarce.

NEW YORK, April 4.—Several of the banks in this city, and especially those up town who do a large business in paying checks over the counter, are complaining of the scarcity of small bills, especially of ones, twos and fives. Some of the banks have found it impossible to get from the treasury more than one-fifth of the amount asked for.

Confessed His Awful Deed.

HOUSTON, Tex., April 4.—Walter E. Shaw is said to have confessed that he killed his mother and aunt with a razor in order to get $40 with which to continue a spree.

Rather risky—the offer that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Risky for them. For you, if you have Catarrh, it's a certainty. You're certain to be cured of it, or to be paid $500. That's what they offer, and in good faith—they cure you, or pay you, no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing.

But—is it so much of a risk? They have a medicine that cures Catarrh, not for a time, but for all time. They've watched it for years, curing the most hopeless cases. They know that in your case there's every chance of success, almost no chance of failure.

Wouldn't any one take such a risk with such a medicine?

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk?

If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist fifty cents and the trial begins.

Mr. Harmony's Need.

WANTED.—A middle-aged widower, with two children, desires the services of a governess. No application considered unless accompanied by the best of references. Address, Thomas Harmony, Mechanicsville.

Miriam Burns laid the paper aside slowly and deliberated. There was no apparent reason why the situation would not suit her, and she it. She was well qualified, in an educational way, for the trust the place promised. She had, also, no ties to bind her to the country town in which she had been born and reared. She sighed a little when her memory ran back on the what-might-have-been, but in the end she, like a brave little woman as she was, put aside sentiment for business and posted an application for Mr. Harmony's position.

Miriam had had a lover during the first days of school-teaching, a handsome, worthy young man named Rutherford—George Rutherford. She had yet the half penny and the photograph and the treasured lock of hair he had given her when he left for the west four years before, and a bundle of letters in her writing desk bore suspicious evidences of frequent handling and some traces of tears. To be sure her better judgment told her that he was unworthy of remembrance, but she kept on loving him, just the same. Three years ago had come a long letter from George, asking her to name a day when he could meet her on half way ground and be married. She had answered it, and then, six months afterward, she had written again, but she awaited a response to either.

Rutherford, she knew, was not dead. She had heard of him, through other channels, once since. He was prospering and supposedly happy, in his western home. This was her romance, and although she had driven all thoughts of the recreant from her heart, as he was at present, she treasured his memory as in the days gone by. She had his mementoes collected in a carefully secured nook in her writing desk. On the inner lid of her treasure-box she had written:

"It is not my nature to forget, therefore I cannot: it is not my wish to forget, therefore I will not. You will find me ever the same."

She had found the extract somewhere and it had pleased her. She had put it where it would be a perpetual reminder.

Mr. Harmony's reply came in a day or two, in a stiff, crabbed handwriting. He wanted her references. She sent them. They included testimonials from all her neighbors and an enthusiastic recommendation from the school board, which even if it had refused her her old position and elected a niece of one of the directors to her place, nevertheless recognized her good qualities and felt happy at an opportunity to show their appreciation. The result of the allied exhibit was that Miriam became Mr. Harmony's governess.

Children the little school-teacher had always loved, and Mamie and Anna, the two placed in her charge, speedily reciprocated her affection. The nursery came to be the retreat from all unhappy reflections and, Mr. Harmony treating her respectfully, though never over-cordially, she grew to be as happy as circumstances would permit.

Mr. Harmony was a man of business, bound up in his commercial pursuits. He had grown especially unresponsive to social demands since his wife's death, five years before, plunging deeper than ever into his business perplexities as a cure for his sorrow. Miriam's first six months were spent in his service without her securing much more than a nod from him and a half grudged "good morning." He loved his children, however, and as he saw their devotion to their governess he came to study her. Investigation confirmed the judgment of his girls. He found daily evidences of her excellencies, when he came to look for them. He began to admire her the more he knew of her, and before the year was out he developed a friendship for her which might have grown to love had not the memory of his dead wife interfered. He had dearly loved that sweet-faced, golden-haired angel, and time had dimmed but little his reverence for her memory.

But Mr. Harmony was a business man and looked at everything in life from its practicability. He knew the present state of affairs at the house could not continue indefinitely. Miss Burns might take it into her practical head to get married, and he knew that he could never supply her place as satisfactorily with his children. Mr. Harmony argued the matter over carefully in his own mind and came to a determination.

"Mr. Harmony would like to see you in the parlor, Miss Burns," said Mary, the maid of all work, a morning or so after. "He's waiting there for you now."

Miss Burns was startled. She wondered what she could have done. She hastily ran over her recent employments but could see no foundation for a discharge—for this she presumed was the reason for the impending interview. But she resolved to put a brass face on it and went down.

Mr. Harmony was standing with his back to the door when she entered, but hastily facing about he said:

"Good morning, Miss Burns," motioning her at the same general deflection of his head included in the salutation to a seat:

"I have sent for you," he continued.

"Yes," she said, simply wondering how she would take the parting from the children.

"You have now been with us for a year, Miss Burns."

"Yes," as she mentally went over the love which had grown up in her heart for her charges.

"You have, I must confess, more than gratified me by your attention to my two daughters. They have grown to—to, in fact, love you, I think."

"Yes," said Miss Burns, wondering if jealousy was to be the foundation for the dismissal.

"I love my children," went on the business like Mr. Harmony, "and I want to make them happy, of course. I have sent for you this morning to ask you if you would not like to make your present home a permanent one. If, in fact, you would marry me."

"Sir?" gasped Miss Burns, unable to believe her own ears. "Marry you?"

"Yes, me!" said Mr. Harmony. "Is there anything very strange about that? I don't ask you to love me. I merely want you to make the home pleasant for my children. They need you, and what they need I need. You need not give me an answer now," beginning to pull on his gloves. "Take time to think it over—say Sunday. That's three days for consideration. Do not decide hastily, but think it over carefully;" and, bowing himself out of the parlor, Mr. Harmony was gone.

Poor Miriam sat for some minutes stupefied by the proposal. Then, silently and with a white face, she made her way to her own room, and, opening her writing desk, took out her treasure box. She opened it, read a letter or two and then stained the photograph with her loving tears.

"I cannot! I cannot!" she cried. "Never!" The extract written on the box in faded ink seemed to add to her resolution: "You will find me ever the same." She could not be false to that vow. Mr. Harmony would have her answer before Sunday.

But when, after the morning in the nursery, with her loving charges calling her "little mother" and hovering around her, vieing with each other in attentions, she came again to consider the question, with her love for them as an argument. She found that she could never give them up. She cried a little when she thought of the dear face in the treasure box, but she gave Mr. Harmony his answer before Sunday. The next morning she told him that she was willing.

Mr. Harmony thanked her and was about to leave the house, when, suddenly remembering something, he came back to say:

"By the way, Miss Burns, a nephew of mine who has bought a junior interest in the business will be here on Sunday. I wish you would see that a room is prepared for him. He will live with us."

Miriam had come to govern the household as well as the children. She promised to see to the room and returned to the nursery, glad of relief from her trial.

Saturday night Mr. Harmony announced that his nephew would be in at midnight. The household retired with hearts and minds busy with the new comer.

Especially Miriam. She wondered what he would be like. She had never heard of him, and even now she knew nothing of his name. She went to sleep, dreaming that he was a prototype of Mr. Harmony, and awoke the next morning convinced that she would like him for the little girls' sake.

She found after she had made her morning toilet that she was an hour too early for breakfast and she resolved on a trip through the grounds. She slipped on her big straw hat, ran out of a side entrance and—collided headlong with a tall stranger who was standing with his back to her at the outer entrance, tranquilly sending whirls of tobacco smoke toward the heavens. It was the nephew, she knew, and she hesitated a moment whether she should stand her ground or fly. She had half formed the apology she knew she should make when the big form's hat went off as he whirled on his heel. He stammered:

"Ex—why—why—Miriam!"

The little governess looked just one moment—a moment which seemed an age—and then, half hysterically crying out, everything began to dance before her and she did the best possible thing under the circumstances and—fainted.

When she came to herself he was standing before her, this stranger, waiting for the water which he had ordered a servant to bring after the first outcry. She was lying in a sheltered spot on the lawn slope. As she opened her eyes the stranger leaned over and tenderly said:

"Do you know me now?"

"Yes," she said, with a great inclination to laugh, hysterically. "You are Mr. Rutherford."

"Why don't you say George, dearest," he said impetuously, and then, suddenly recollecting himself he said: "but perhaps I have not the right to use such an expression?"

"Why didn't you answer my letters?" asked the little governess.

"Why didn't you answer mine?"

"I did. I wrote you twice, and—and—thought you had forgotten me," with a sob which opened the way to a good cry.

Rutherford was no more than other men and, stooping over her drew the sobbing head down on his shoulder. They explained it all before breakfast. How he had written and how neither letters had ever reached their destination—a just cause for a change in the post office administration, they both agreed.

They went into the breakfast room arm in arm.

"Hello," ejaculated Mr. Harmony; "how's this?"

"Uncle," said Mr. Rutherford, "you'll excuse me, won't you, if I rob you of a sweet little woman who promises to take care of your children for you. Yes, sir, Miss Burns and I are going to get married if you will withdraw from the field. We were sweethearts long ago, and have just patched up a truce."

"Humph!" said Mr. Harmony, as he attacked the sugar-bowl for a fresh lump for his coffee.

"I suppose I enter very little into your calculations whether I consent or not. But I'll agree on one condition only—that you live here and let Miss—Miss Burns—look after the children. They need her, and what they need I need."

BEN M. JOHNSON.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Little Lady Alexandra Duff, who, if her mother, the duchess of Fife, were to become queen of England, might herself some day occupy the throne, is pictured as a baby of preternaturally mature expression, with features very much like those of her royal great-grandmother.

—The truth about the condition of M. de Lesseps, the great French engineer, is that while his physical health is fairly good, his mind is so enfeebled that he can scarcely sustain conversation, and that a return to vigorous health for him is considered highly improbable by those close to him.

—James Whitcomb Riley's income from his readings and recitations equals a bank president's salary, while Bill Nye, in 1891, cleared $40,000 from his appearances on the rostrum. Max O'Rell and Will Carleton get $200 a night from their managers, and George W. Cable receives $100 every time he reads.

—The British commentator stumbles hopelessly over words and expressions in Shakespeare which are still common speech in Vermont. Nowhere in the world did the older English survive so long as among the Green mountains. The common speech in Vermont in 1800 was that of Shakespeare's time, almost undefiled.

—Sir Morell Mackenzie was well known in Louisville, where he once visited. One of his favorite patients was Mary Anderson Navarro, to whose house in London he was often attracted. His own home in London was one of the handsomest residences there, and it was filled with treasures of art, of which Dr. Mackenzie was a great lover.

—Margaret Fuller used to be accounted a very wise woman, and doubtless she was, for Mrs. Sherwood credits her with having once said: "Never talk about yourself, your diseases, your domestics or your dresses. Talk about your friends' interests, not your own." Perhaps it was by putting that precept into practice that Miss Fuller gained her great celebrity as a converser.

—Gen. Butler thinks that Mr. Lincoln had but one fault—and that was a virtue—he had such great kindness of heart that he could not punish criminals. The general had tried his best to make Mr. Lincoln hang deserters, but the president could not be brought to do it. As a result of his clemency there was at the close of the war an army of deserters numbering more than one hundred and seventy-seven thousand.

—The lord mayor of London, who had been in communication with the prince of Wales as to the disposition of the wedding gifts from the corporation intended for the Princess Mary of Teck, is said, "on the best authority," to have received an intimation that it will be best to do nothing in the matter at present; and the rather practical explanation is given that the engagement of Prince George to an English princess will shortly be announced.

—The most remarkable thing about the brilliant careeer of Guy de Maupassant, whose sad mental collapse excites the sympathy of the whole world of novel-readers, is that it was the fruit of the long and industrious literary apprenticeship he served with Flaubert. From that novelist he learned to appreciate the truth of Buffon's saying, that "talent is merely continued patience," and verified it in later life by the success that rewarded his pains.

—Gustave Dore's mother was a plain, quiet woman, who preferred a domestic life and did not shine in society, but she had the greatest sympathy with her illustrious son. She studied art that she might understand his work, read the books and newspapers of which he was fond, made his friends her friends, and humored his many, though harmless whims. The great artist gave as a reason for never marrying that he "always compared all women to his mother, and they fell far short of her.

HUMOROUS.

—Watts—"Peck seems so attached to his wife." Potts—"That describes him exactly. He is just a sort of attachment."—Indianapolis Journal.

—"I see," said a large man to the doctor, "that you advertise to reduce fat men." "Yes, sir." "Do you mean physically or financially?"—Washington Star.

—"'All the world loves a lover,'" the poets say,
"And I'm your lover, sweet May," said he.
"Not all the world loves a lover," said May;
"There's one exception, and that is me."
—N. Y. Press.

—Gentleman—"Does work make you tired?" Tramp—"No, sir." Gentleman—"What!" Tramp—"I never get so far as that. But the thought of it makes me tired."—Epoch.

—A Soothing Reply.—Irate Customer (in a restaurant)—"I've been waiting here half an hour." Hibernian Waiter—"Half an hour! Begor, I've been waiting here two years.

—For Immediate Insertion.—Butcher—"How much bologna sausage did you say?" Hungry Reporter—"Give me—give me about three-quarters of a column."—Chicago Tribune.

—Wife—"Nothing for me? Then you have forgotten this is my birthday?" Husband—"Not at all! Only I didn't wish to remind you that you've grown older."—Fliegende Blatter.

—Some one speaks to Calino, man of science, of a friend who has eight brothers. "Eight brothers!" he exclaims; "then if he has eight brothers, each one of them will have eight brothers, too, which makes sixty-four. Impossible!"—Le Figaro.

—"Have you change for sixpence?" asked a tramp. "Yes," replied the gentleman, "where is the sixpence?" "I haven't one, but I thort if you had change for sixpence you might have a copper or two for a poor man wot's seen better days. All the gents I have asked for help said they hadn't any change."—Tit-Bits.

—A few years ago, when elevators were not quite so common as now, an elderly woman from the rural districts rode up and down and up again in one at one of the city hotels. "Where shall I let you out?" finally asked the attendant, on the second down trip. "As near as possible to the Forty-second street station," placidly replied his passenger.

—The lady was talking to an old friend about the marriage of her daughter to a wealthy man. "I understand," said the friend, "that Madge has married very well." "Oh, yes," replied the gratified mother, "very well indeed." "But he had such a peculiar name; Frizzlewiggle, wasn't it?" "Yes." "That's perfectly horrid, don't you think?" "Well," hesitated the mother, "it doesn't sound very melodious, possibly, but it is perfectly beautiful on a check."—Detroit Free Press.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Grated Cheese: In using cheese there are always small pieces left which if grated and placed on a pretty little plate or bowl, and served with a teaspoon, will be found an appetizing addition to the bread and tea which often, alone, serve for the evening meal.

—Sweet Potato Pie: Boil sweet potatoes until well done, mash and rub through a sieve. To a pint of pulp add three pints of sweet milk, a tablespoonful of melted butter, a teacup of sugar, three eggs, pinch of salt and nutmeg or lemon to flavor. Use rich paste for undercrust.—Detroit Free Press.

—Hot Slaw: Cut the cabbage in half, and shave it very finely. Put it into a stewpan, with a piece of butter and salt to taste; pour in just enough water to prevent it from sticking to the pan. Cover it closely, and let it stew, stir it frequently, and when it is quite tender, add a little vinegar and serve it hot.—Boston Budget.

—Lamb Cutlets: Have your butcher cut some cutlets from the best end of a neck of lamb two or three inches from the top of the bones. Get him then to shape the cutlets for you. Dip them in egg and crumbs and fry them. Make a bed of green peas in the center of your meat dish, pile the meat around it and serve, or else serve with tomato sauce. —Household Monthly.

—Panned oysters, if cooked quickly and served at once, retain their flavor wonderfully. Allow the oysters to drain until free from liquor; cook enough at a time to cover the bottom of your long-handled frying-pan. When the latter is smoking hot throw in the oysters and shake them until they swell and bubble, which will take about one minute; then add a teaspoonful of butter; sprinkle on pepper and salt to taste. Shake once more and serve.—N. Y. World.

—A very good pie is made of cranberries, decorated with a meringue, exactly like a lemon pie. Stew a quart of cranberries with a cup of water for twenty minutes; then add a cup of sugar, or, if you do not like an acid pie, a cup and a half of sugar. Line a pie-plate and fill it with this mixture. Cover it with a meringue, made of the beaten whites of three eggs, three tablespoonfuls of sugar and a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Spread it over the pie and bake ten minutes longer—N. Y. Tribune.

—To Brighten Leather Furniture: Furniture dealers say that real leather should not fade as long as it holds together. However, it does fade; so try this method of brightening it: Wash the leather with a sponge that has been wrung out of hot soap-suds; then rub as dry as possible. Now place the furniture in the sun and wind, that it may get thoroughly dry as quickly as possible. Next, rub hard with a cloth that has been wet with kerosene. Let the furniture stand in the air until the odor of the oil has passed off.—Ladies' Home Journal.

TAFFETAS AND MOIRES.

Fabrics That Are Largely Imported for Spring and Summer.

Taffeta silks are largely imported for spring and summer dresses. They come in light blue or pink grounds, with double black stripes quite far apart, the space between dotted with black or white figures or baskets of flowers. White taffetas have satin stripes, an inch apart, of pale green with yellow, or pink with blue. Very young ladies have adopted moire antique for both semi-dress or full dress. They begin where their grandmothers left off. In the evening they wear bell-shaped, demi-trained skirts of white satin-striped moire entirely without trimming. The moire corsage, square and half-low in the neck, is covered with white chiffon, and has a bodice or corselet made of silver or pearl butterflies. Stripes of silver and pearl passementerie hold down the full chiffon above the corselet. The short sleeves are a full puff of chiffon over the moire, fastened with a soft chiffon knot. A Watteau bow of moire is held at the back of the neck by a pearl and silver butterfly. This charming gown was worn by a debutante at the New Year's ball. Other white moires have narrow stripes of yellow edged with a filet of black, or hair lines of mauve finished with pale-blue stripes. Broader pink stripes are bordered with black on a white ground, and there are pink and yellow quarter-inch stripes separated by black penciled lines.

Durable twilled silks of various kinds are revived. The satin-finished surfaces of many are of the smallest twills, while plain surahs are woven in rather wide diagonals. Very light surah silks of gray, lilac, old-blue or pink have petit pois dots of the same color. New black surahs have bunches of bright-yellow buttercups, and brown surahs are strewn with violets. Shot surfaces are exceedingly pretty in the satin surahs, as gray shot with rose and dotted with rose, or marked with square outlines or small blocks in a very effective way.—Harper's Bazar.

Dimity Dresses.

White dimity strewn with colored flowers, its sheerness strengthened by lengthwise cords, has become a favorite fabric for wash dresses. It is being made in most dainty dresses for midsummer, with trimming of white laces that wash well—as the Genoa point, Valenciennes in new designs, and some novel laces that are mostly of plain meshes with a narrow design of leaf or flower along the scalloped edge. The waist, without lining, is cut like a basque with one or two side forms and with darts, all the seams having their edges neatly turned under instead of being left raw. The sleeves are mostly in wide bishop shape, drooping on a waist-band or cuff of lace. The waist trimming of lace is put on to outline a jacket front, leaving the dimity pointed like a vest, and to edge the back in a scant frill. There are also yoke-like trimmings of lace, with jabots down the entire front; while others have a single fall of lace, like a bib. The skirt in the slight bell shape already described may be quite plain, or else have a flounce of lace or of dimity at the foot.—Harper's Bazar.

The Adjustable Slipper Toe.

The girl who dotes on pretty slippers has found that the toe of her satin or silk slipper wears out long before it should, and that there is a remedy for this in the adjustable slipper toe. They are easily fastened on, and are made of silver, gold, and bronze. The society girl has the adjustable toe made of gold, upon which is her monogram sparkling with her favorite stone. A dark red satin slipper will have a golden toe, upon which is a monogram of garnets.—Chicago Tribune.

TAKE HEART, MOTHERS.

The Sickliest Children Often Live to Be the Strongest Men.

Mothers with delicate children may well take courage when they read of the sickly life of some of the exceptionally long-lived men. Whether it is the extreme care taken that thus strengthens their constitutions, or whether the ailments of the system are worked off in their many illnesses, it is certain that not a few who were particularly frail as children have outlived many of their more vigorous contemporaries. A notable instance of this was the Emperor William I., of Germany. For many years he was frail and delicate, giving great anxiety to his mother, and it was only through unremitting care that he was safely brought through his ailments to develop into a superb specimen of mankind, a veritable king among men in stature and physique. No mother, therefore, who goes through the intense anxiety of rearing a delicate and beloved child need despair of seeing him in the end strong and vigorous.—Los Angeles Herald.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

County Cullings.

The Waverly Tribune devoted about a column of this week's issue to answering Rev. Mr. Davie's article on Boycotting in last week's GAZETTE. We presume the preacher will have something further on the subject next week in the GAZETTE.

Mr. Ic. Murphy is our authority for informing the public, and especially the voters of Wright County, that I. Gutzwiller, Jr. said, "John Nugent is the best Sheriff in the State, but he makes the other fellows pay for it though." It would seem hard to reconcile this statement with some of the Eagle's former assertions.

Senator Eaton expresses himself as having no interest in the chairmanship of the Republican Committee of the county this year and assumes the position of "sick 'im Bose", "sick 'im Tige". Of course not when his term of office isn't out for two years yet. Just let some good Republican move to extend the term of the chairman's office to four years and see how soon the Senator would take a lively interest in the business.

Borke District.

The school in the Borke district closed March 26, after a term of five months. The total enrollment was twenty-two; daily average sixteen.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 1, 1892.

Mr. Harrison is arranging a hole for himself to crawl through should the opposition to his nomination grow dangerous by concentrating upon somebody, or should he become convinced, like Mr. Blaine, that no Republican can be elected, by having his friends hint it around that he will not be a candidate unless assured in advance that his nomination will be made on the first ballot.

In view of the spread eagle communication which Mr. Harrison recently addressed to Lord Salisbury, the satisfactory ending of the controversy is a very fortunate thing for this country, although it must be humiliating to Mr. Harrison when he compares the tone of his entirely unnecessary communication, alleged by his admirers to have been an ultimatum, with that of Lord Salisbury, which is extremely friendly, and which also shows that there was as little reason for the latest war scare which Mr. Harrison fathered, as there was for the one concerning Chili. The unfortunate part about this sort of thing is that it causes the people to lose confidence in the administration, and sometime when there is real danger of war they may refuse to respond to the cry of "wolf".

Representative Springer expects to be able to attend next Monday's session of the House, and move a suspension of the rules for the purpose of passing the free wool bill, general debate upon which is to close on Saturday. Mr. Springer will not make a speech on this bill, in fact his strength would not allow him to, but he wishes to move the suspension of the rules for the passage of the bill of which he is the author.

The sugar bounties already paid by the Treasury department aggregate $4,000,000, and the claims pending foot up $3,500,000.

Boss Platt, of New York, was over here this week holding mysterious conferences with prominent Republicans in Congress, and there is reason to believe that his visit bodes no good to the Harrison boom, notwithstanding statements that he had promised to support Mr. Harrison. The only man that Platt ever really and sincerely supports is Thomas C. Platt.

Ex-representative Owen, who was, it was said at the time the appointment was made, appointed Commisioner of Immigration—a position created by the billion dollar Congress—by Mr. Harrison in order to pay one of his Indiana political debts, is in the hottest kind of hot water, and it is among the possibilities that he may figure as the defendant before a criminal court. He is charged openly by his immediate superior, Assistant Secretary Nettleton, with being unfit, incompetent and untrustworthy, and by implication with being dishonest. These facts have been brought out in the investigation which the joint House and Senate Immigration Committee is conducting, and which promises to show that some Treasury officials—among them Assistant Secretary Nettleton—have been wastefully extravagant, if not actually dishonest, in allowing $600,000 to be spent upon the Government Immigration Station at Ellis Island, when only $250,000 had been appropriated, the difference being paid from the fund known as "head money". The thing must be very rotten somewhere, or Senator Chandler, chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration, who has never been accused of being "squeamish" as to public expenditures, would not have been so plain-spoken in his examination of Nettleton and other witnesses who have appeared before the committee.

Senator Mills changed his mind about remaining in the House until the Free Wool bill was passed, and was on Wednesday sworn in as a senator. His vote will not be needed, as the wool bill will receive the votes of about two-thirds of the House.

The business of the House is in such a condition that if it could dictate the time of adjournment it would not be later than June 1, but it is already apparent that the Senate will attempt to extravagantly increase the appropriation bills, as passed by the House, and of course, the House will fight to maintain its economical figures, which will necessarily prolong the session.

Much has been written about Democratic dissention because of the shelving of the free coinage bill, but mighty little of it can be discovered. There can be no doubt that a majority of the House are in favor of free coinage, and would vote for it if given an opportunity, but it is equally true that a majority of the Democrats are opposed to the adoption of a gag rule to pass that or any other measure That is the whole situation in a nutshell. Senator Stewart has given notice that he will next Monday, call up his free coinage bill. Then we shall see some dissention on the same subject in the Republican Senate.

World's Fair Notes.

The World's Fair appropriations by foreign countries, as far as reported, aggregate more than $4,500,000.

A herd of live elk will be taken from Idaho to the Exposition. In the Montana exibit will be shown about 100 specimens of wild animals and birds, native to that State, and set up by a skillful taxidermist.

Idaho will show some splendid specimens of mica in the Mines building. It has ledges of mica eight feet thick and apparently inexhaustible. Sheets of it as large as 10 by 12 inches, without a flaw, and as thin as tissue paper, are not uncommon It is proposed to have some of the windows in the Idaho building glazed with mica.

Minnesota will supplement its World's Fair appropriation of $50,000 by $100,000 raised by subscription. Nearly three fourths of that amount has already been secured. Hennepin county, in which Minneapolis is situated, has contributed $25,000. Minnesota will expend $25,000 for a building.

From the Royal nurseries for Ireland John Thorpe of the Bureau of Floraculture has received information that two cases containing 1,550 plants have been shipped to the World's fair. The announcement came through Alexander Dixon & Co, who maintain the nurseries. Mr. Thorpe believes that his floral display will eclipse anything of the sort which the world has ever seen.

It has been finally settled that the shoe and leather industry will have a seperate building at the fair. Representatives of that industry have accepted the site offered them, and will erect, at an expense of $100,000, a building, measuring 150 by 600 feet, in which they will show an almost endless array of leather products, and every process in their manufacture from the raw hide to the most finished article.

Norwegians living in Chicago with the help of their countrymen in other parts of their country, are engaged in raising sufficient money to erect a building for Norway at the Exposition. Norway's appropriation of $50,260 is to be bevoted entirely to securing an exhibit.

An East Indian village and exhibit will occupy 200,000 square feet of space on Midway Plaisance.

The silk Association of America and the Silk Industry Association have decided to combine in making the finest possible exhibit of silk goods and products.

The Methodists have decided to hold an international camp meeting of a month's duration at the time of the Expositson. It will be held half the time at Desplaines and the other half at Lake Bluff. Both places are a few miles out from Chicago.

LONG LAKE.

Long Lake will have some new sidewalk from the postoffice to the depot and town hall in the near future.

Mr. Washington Rader, of Delano, was in town one day last week.

Miss Caroline Borgersrode, who has been visiting with Mrs. C. Hehl for the past four weeks returned to her home at Winsted last week.

L. A. Lydiard spent Sunday at home.

On the morning of March 25th our depot agent was seen wandering about the streets with a new hat on and a hand full of cigars. At first people thought he was getting wrong in his upper story from overwork, but when your correspondent asked him what the matter was, he replied, "Oh, it's a boy. Do you smoke?"

Prof. Moses Hull, of Chicago, lectured on Spiritualism at the town hall Tuesday evening. Quite a large crowd was in attendance.

Geo. Alley is painting the inside of Frank Smith's house.

John Bryant spent Sunday at Watertown.

Chas. Tromley came down from the woods Wednesday evening.

The Million Votes.

From The Voice, the leading Temperance organ of the country we learn that a strong effort is to be made to bring the Prohibition Party Vote for President up to the Million mark by securing pledges as follows:

"We, the undersigned, being profoundly impressed with the aggressive power of the Liquor Traffic and the overwhelming evils, Political, Industrial and Moral, growing out of it, believe that a strong influence would be exerted upon public sentiment and a long step taken toward the eradication of those evils if the enemies of the Liquor Traffic would present as united a front as the Liquor dealers present when their business is attacked. We therefore agree to vote, at the Presidential Election in 1892, for the candidates of the Prohibition Party for President and Vice-President, provided the signatures of One Million Voters be secured to this Agreement."

Blanks are furnished free, on application to The Voice, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York City.

Should this scheme win it might cut quite a figure in the outcome of the election.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

MINNEAPOLIS CLEVELAND CLUB.

Banquet at the West Hotel.

On Wednesday evening the Cleveland Club of Minneapolis, with a number of other Democrats from different parts of the State held a banquet at the West Hotel. It was decidedly for Cleveland, the mere mention of his name bringing forth hearty applause.

After a fine banquet toasts were responded to as follows:

J. C. Haynes, President of the club welcomed the guests and introduced toast master Frank C. Brooks, who was a good one and called for "Thomas Jefferson to be responded to by Hon. Thomas Wilson, the Thomas Jefferson of Minnesota but who was unavoidably absent. The toast was ably responded to by a few extemporaneous but eloquent remarks by John W. Willis, of St. Paul. "Democracy in Minnesota Past and Present" was handled by J. W. Lawrence in an able way. "Grover Cleveland" by Hon. Leroy D. Thoman of Chicago, a former member of Grover Cleveland's civil service commission was the speech of the evening and was received with many ringing applauses as good points were made in rapid succession.

Letters were read from several parties who had been invited to be present and were from various causes unable to attend. First was one from Grover Cleveland himself, then came those of T. J. Bayard, Don M. Dickinson, William M. Vilas, Gov. Boies and others, which in their turn received the cheers of the enthusiastic audience.

"The Local Democracy" was responded to by Philip B. Winston who predicted success this time sure, provided local jealousies were buried clean out of sight. "The Cleveland Club" by Howe Paige was interesting and instructive. Instead of the "Billion Dollar Congress" by Judge Flandrau, unavoidably absent, toast master Brooks read a poem which he said he thought would about fill the bill for the judge's idea of that matter. The poem was entitled, "The Devil Outdone."

"The Wage Earner in Politics," by Oliver T. Ericson, who had lately left the G. O. P. because he thought it had outlived its usefulness, was a statement of the situation with many voters today.

"The Campaign of Education," by Sampson R. Child was the closing toast of the evening and received with the same marked attention as had characterized the earlier courses in the feast of reason, logic and eloquence. Occasions of this kind serve to stir up the rank and file of Democracy and breed harmony as nothing else can do. Meetings should be held in every village and school district throughout the State and the points at issue plainly stated, and literature sown broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the land and voters will soon decide for themselves what to do in the matter and how to vote.

Boycotting Again.

MR. EDITOR GAZETTE:—Dear Sir. Again we ask a little of your valuable space in which to say a word in reply to an editorial in the Waverly Tribune of last week.

The thought is about as follows: The license system is right. Therefore whoever does not support license is either "a bigot" a fool" or "a hot-headed partisan."

Let us take the points in order.

1. Says the Tribune, "It seems astonishing that a minister of the Gospel in the nineteenth century should seriously defend an act of bigotry and intolerance at variance with free institutions." The Tribune is right. 'Glad we are not guilty.' In our last letter we said, 'We do not favor boycotts.' Wonder why the Tribune did not quote that.

Who constituted us a judge, etc? Why, the same power no doubt, that made the Tribune a judge of those "hot-headed partisans" and those blinded by prejudices.

What is the use of elections if we have an infalliable guide, etc? We need them because some persons, even some editors, will not do right when they know what it is.

2. "If, as Mr. Davies maintains, the people who voted against license are right in boycotting the opposite party, etc." Mr. Editor, we have not so maintained. We claim the right to "self protection against moral as well as physical harm." Why did not the Tribune quote this also? Why does it persist in making false statements? The Tribune should not judge its readers by so low a standard—they deserve better.

3. "Supposing a resort to the ballot box should result in a triumph of the latter, (saloon element. The supremacy of the law should be asserted." We should like the Tribune to show how, in Montrose, the law has been violated. The people are not preparing to murder the council, saloon keepers, business men or burn down any buildings.

Will the Tribune tell us, please, what the other side has done? Please relate to the public what the rumsellers of Parsons, Kan. did with one who opposed them. What did the rumsellers of New York recently threaten? Tell us also, about the Sioux City case where W. W. Erwin got a gold-headed cane for clearing the man charged with murder. (But do not tell us all the cases—you have not time enough.) Will the Tribune please to tell us in what sense these acts were law abiding. Talk about the supremacy of the law being asserted when hundreds of saloons are every day and in every state, violating the law. And on the Sabbath more than on any other day.

But if the "Montrose boycotters" are wrong, lawnessness on the other side will not excuse them. We do not ask it.

5. If the Tribune wishes to know the truth regarding our "libel on common sense," let it interview the best citizens of Montrose.

5. If being compelled to use our sovereignty for the good of all is "simply nonsense" it seems strange that after a century of national experience, this fact should be left to be discovered by the editor of the Waverly Tribune.

But we are trespassing upon your space and time. Mr. Editor and will close asking the Tribune next time it speaks to talk upon the question.

REV. J. R. DAVIES.

DELANO, April 14, 1892.

The Dutch of It.

EDITOR GAZETTE.—The Buzzard last week adopts the methods of little boys when they are at their wits ends he says, "I see you later." Very well, cowards and poltroons say so too.

Next he touches a very serious matter when he says that Booth had no need of refunding any money, he was entitled to pay, only Dave ought to have paid him out of his own pocket, instead of having him present his bill to the county and say it would be all right.

So according to this statement Booth sent in a bill to the county knowing the same to be fraudulent. Well this is charging a man with a serious crime, and you better go before the next grand jury and prove it for section 504 of the Penal Code provides as follows:

A person who, knowingly with intent to defraud, presents, for audit or allowance, or for payment, to any officer or board of officers of the State or of any County, Town, City or Borough, School District or Village, authorized to audit, or allow or to pay bills claims, or charges, any false or fraudulent claims, bill, account, writing or voucher, or any bill, account or demand, containing false or fraudulent charges, items or claims is guilty of a felony. Otherwise this evaporation can be applied word for word to his road petition blank deal.

But amusing it is when the fellow quotes German. When some weeks ago I quoted the Latin: Manus manum lavat (one hand washes the other) it robbed him of his sleep, he consulted (Baron) Proffessor Kruger to give him some tips to get even with me, and the Proffessor, remembering how a few months ago the Dr. got it on him about going to the woods to "make wood", thought revenge is sweet, even if it is on the wrong party, told the fellow to say; Keine kraehe hackt der anderen die augen aus. (No crow hacks the eyes out of the other.) Now this is just the same German as the former is English How in the world "no crow" could hack out anything is a miracle to me; "it is making wood." That German saying is; Ein krache hackt der anderen die augen nicht aus. (A crow don't hack out the eyes of another.)

Of course the poor simpleton is rather to be commiserated than anything else, and it is somewhat out of place for the Proffessor to play that joke on him, his early education was sadly neglected, he was herding swine at the age that the Proffessor went to school or was already initiated in the art of mixing cocktails; at his best he could only talk a sort of German Kauderwelsch, and as I said before it reflects no credit on the Proffessor.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

ORONO-Continued.

The following parties were also 1855 settlers of Orono, viz: Enos Stubbs and his wife, Lydia, the latter being a daughter of Allen Grave, and Charles Jenkinson, of Philadelphia, and family. Jenkinson was a dancing master and during the long winter evenings of those times gave instructions in his profession in the log cabins of the "Big Woods".

Early in the settlement of the locality, music and dancing with occasional games at checkers or cards were about the only amusements sought as a relief to the monotony of nature, and as a wind up at a logging bee. The dancing hall was not spacious, being the main and only chamber, excepting the loft of the settler's cabin and music did not consist of an elaborate orchestra, being only one plainly clad individual with a violin occupying a limited space at the side of the hearth and although the participants had during the day exerted themselves physically, rolling together many shapeless timbers, they enjoyed the evening with a nimbleness, buoyancy of spirit and decorum in behavior, although plainly attired, displayed on the most elaborate occasions.

In the latter part of 1857 a lyceum was organized at Cumberland and carried on certain evenings in the building occupied by the school taught during the day by Charles G. Christlieb. Many important questions of the time were discussed as "Woman's Rights" "Whether there was a future endless punishment," "Spiritualism," "The equality of the negro" and "The slavery question." The participants being Allen T., and his wife, Martha French, Henry Stubbs, Nathan J. Stubbs, Allen Grave, Mary A. Grave, Samuel Lydiard, Wm. Archibald, Edward Hainlin, Gibson Teas, Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard Barnes and others, some of the debaters coming from other localities: the participants having decided convictions on those questions.

Dorus A. Keyes, of Michigan, and family and Franklin N. Fleming settled at the proposed townsite of Cumberland in 1857.

ROADS AND MAIL ROUTES.

In 1856 a mail route from Minneapolis to Hutchinson was established, utilizing the road already opened to Watertown, being authorized to deliver mail to following postoffices on that part of the route, viz: Wayzata, Maple Plain, at its first location, and Watertown. The contract was let to —— Sumner, of Hutchinson, under whom the mail was carried for several years on horseback, by Charles Fish.

The U. S. Government having authorized the location of a military road from Minneapolis to Fort Ridgely, surveys of competing routes for its location were commenced late in 1856, two of those routes being as follows: One route was suggested by Isaac A. Christlieb, who in company with Samuel Lydiard, examined the proposed route, and finding it feasable reported it to the commissioner having the matter in charge, who employed R. J. Mendenhall to make a survey, which finally resulted in its being established as a road, which with some modifications, is now represented by Western Avenue, Minneapolis, and the North Watertown road, making a second road from Minneapolis to Watertown, the two roads being in after years known as the North and South roads east of their junction at Irvin Shrewsbury's. The other competing route to Fort Ridgely was suggested by Wm. F. Russell in co-operation with others. It also left Minneapolis by Western Avenue from which it soon diverged and continued westerly to Wayzata and from the latter place it ran more southerly, touching the northerly extremes of the bays of Lake Minnetonka, running through Wm. F. Russell's proposed Townsite of Island City, lying between Crystal Bay and West Arm, and passing on to St. Bonifacius and Glencoe. The survey of the latter route was made by —— —— under whom James Maxwell served as an assistant. As a road to Fort Ridgley, this route was preferred, and although it received the appropriation designed for its opening and construction, only limited portions if any, in Hennepin county were opened under its auspices.

It may be also stated in connection with these roads and mail route, that upon the establishment of Tamarack P. O. on the Watertown and Hutchinson mail route at the residence of its P. M., Henry Stubbs, that a road was opened from the new P. O. to the North Road, intersecting the latter at a creek, two miles east of Irvin Shrewsbury's which had the effect to reduce the distances between postoffices on the mail route and to remove the general travel from that part of the Garrison-Moffat road running by E. B. Sutherland's.

The road known for many years as the Rockford and Minneapolis road, developed by the progress of settlements, from Crystal Lake, through the towns of Plymouth, Medina and Greenwood between the years 1853 and 1856 and was legalized by a survey made August 25, 1856.

World's Fair Notes.

Intending exhibitors at the Exposition can get the general rules and regulations for exhibitors and the special regulations pertaining to exhibits in the department or departments in which they may be particularly interested by addressing Director General Davis.

A number of owners of steam yachts in New York intend to utilize them to transport themselves and their friends to the Exposition by the way of the way of the St. Lawrence and Welland Canal. They believe it will be of great advantage to live aboard there yachts and thus be indepedent of crowded hotels. It is reported that the owners of many steam barges in Canada will fit them with comfortable living quarters, and carry Canadian visitors to and from the fair.

Ostrich eggs, artistically painted in a prize competition, are to be a feature in the exhibit made by Cape Colony, South Africa.

New Hampshire, which claims to be the "Switzerland of America," has appropriately planned to erect a Swiss chalet for its World's Fair building.

The Great Western Railway of England will exhibit in the Transportation Building the famous old locomotive, "The Lord of the Isles," which was built at the company's works in Swindon in 1851, from designs by the late Sir Daniel Gooch This locomotive was a notable exhibit at the first World's Fair in London in 1851. From that time until July 1881, it was continually in service, and ran during that period a distance of 789,300 miles without being fitted with a new boiler. As a pioneer of early railroading and as a contrast to the powerful modern "Mogul," this old locomotive will attract much attention.

R. S. Moore, of Newburn, N. C., claims to have fragments of the chain which restrained Columbus when he was in prison, and he intends to exhibit them at the Fair. J. C. Calhoun, of New York, says he has pieces of the house in San Domingo in which Columbus was imprisoned, and he has a similar desire.

DELANO, Wright Co., - MINN.

EIGHT electric executions have taken place in New York since the adoption of the new method of disposing of murderers.

A TEXAS boy found an old bomb that had been lying in the water since the war and tried to open it with an ax. It exploded; he may live, but it is doubtful.

IT is interesting to note that of the 328,000 divorces granted in the United States during the last twenty years 316,000 were granted at the request of wives.

IT being leap year Liluokalani, queen of the Sandwich Islands, proposes a union with Uncle Sam. It is to be hoped that she will not insist on his taking her name.

SENATOR STANFORD'S bill to determine the value of the legal-tender dollar may serve some useful end, but the only way to really find out the value of a dollar is to need one badly.

JAMES BERRY, the English executioner, has rushed into print as an advocate of the abolition of capital punishment. Perhaps it is in order to add that Mr. Berry has resigned his office after a professional career during which he executed some two hundred criminals.

THE Behring sea dispute is to be settled by arbitration, the Chilian muss is a thing of the past, and our strained relations with Italy are almost forgotten. Were it not for the baking powder and spring medicine wars the country would be enjoying a period of profound peace.

PEOPLE rarely hear nowadays of Emerson Bennett, yet he was widely known twenty years ago as a novelist, his "Prairie Flower" having reached a sale of 100,000 copies. He is a veteran of 70 and lives in Philadelphia. Mr. Bennett is still a prolific maker of manuscript.

A COW kicked over a kerosene lamp and in a few hours Chicago was in ashes. Somebody threw the stump of a cigarette among a lot of cotton in New Orleans and $3,000,000 worth of property was swept away. The coal oil lamp still holds the championship but the cigarette has done quite well for its size.

THAT mere infants should be carrying pistols to school, in Chicago and elsewhere, and be playing with them during school hours, shows, says the Chicago Journal, a lack of home and school vigilance in the highest degree censurable. What is the probable future of a boy aged 13 who carries a pistol around with him, even to his school?

THE commissioner of pensions has reported to the secretary of the interior that there are now on the completed files awaiting adjudication 181,960 cases, of which number 72,749 are original invalid claims, 29,693 original widows' and dependents' claims, and 79,518 increase and new disabilities claims. "This lot of cases constitute about five months' work for the office."

FOUR misguided souls are tramping from Seattle to Chicago. Their impetus is a two thousand five hundred dollar purse. The money will be theirs if they reach that city by August 20. A man with an everlasting tired feeling is one of the party. He pushes a wheelbarrow loaded with what the Romans called "impedimenta," camp outfit. One of the party is a variety actress, Lou Howard by name.

WHILE irrigation has been doing wonders for the mythical "great American desert" which the geography pupils of forty or fifty years ago used to see upon their atlases, it has done something equally wonderful for the real African desert of Sahara. By the use of artesian wells 12,000,000 acres of this desert in Algerian territory have been reclaimed and brought under cultivation. This land is especially adapted to grape culture, and in one year recently Algiers sent to France 10,500,000 gallons of wine.

A STRIKING illustration of the perfection and solidity of modern marine architecture is afforded by the case of the steamship Eider, which has just been dragged from Atherfield ledge after having been at the mercy of the waves and rocks for almost two months. The stanchest vessels of twenty years ago would have gone to pieces in two days in such a position, but the Eider has withstood tempestuous weather and heavy pounding and with slight repairs will resume her place in the ocean-carrying trade.

A NOTED Pennsylvania manufacturer gives the following advice to young men: Do not think a man has done his full duty when he has performed the work assigned him. A man will never rise if he does only this. Promotion comes from exceptional work. Whatever your wages are, save a little. Live within your means. The heads of stores, farms, banks, lawyers' offices, insurance companies, mills and factories, are not seeking capital; they are seeking brains and business habits. The man who saves a little from his income gives the surest indication of the qualities which employers are seeking for.

COUNSEL for Deeming, the Australian murderer, propose to set up a plea that shows very clearly the vice of the modern legal practice regarding the defense of insanity. Deeming killed his wife and four children in cold blood and has failed to show any signs of remorse. It is gravely asserted that evidence will be introduced to show that Deeming inherited vicious propensities which he is incapable of resisting; that, therefore, he is not morally responsible and should not be made to suffer for crime. Perhaps the readiest answer to such a claim is that it is equivalent to denying that he is a human being at all.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

ARBOR DAY.

The Governor's Proclamation Naming May 2 for the Celebration.

The following is a copy of a proclamation issued by Gov. Merriam:

It has become a well established practice in most of the states of this union to devote one day in each year to the planting of trees along the highways, around the homes and about the public grounds.

In recognition of the spirit of this graceful custom, I, William R. Merriam, governor of the state of Minnesota, do hereby designate Monday, May 2, 1892, as Arbor day and recommend that it be respected as a spring festival in which all should unite to contribute to the general fund of enjoyment and profit.

Let all esteem it an agreeable duty to embellish the homestead, the roadside and the public park with the beautiful trees and flowering shrubs, and with a deeper sense of obligation let us cherish and adorn the last resting places of those whose example and deeds have added luster to the state and security to our inhabitants. This day should be particularly a gala day for our school children, and I trust that it will be observed with suitable exercises by the public schools throughout the state.

In testimony thereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the state to be affixed at the capitol in the city of St. Paul this 2d day of April, A. D. 1892.

WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
By the Governor.

F. P. BROWN,
Secretary of State.

Infection From Shaving.

In choosing a barber, a man should choose one who, whatever he is not, must be clean and careful. It should always be remembered that there are safeguards well within the reach of this class of tradesmen, which a customer may fairly exact for his own security as a part of the common law of shaving. These include the use of perfectly fresh water and soap, or preferably shaving cream as admitting of exclusive use, a clean brush and a clean razor for each person shaved. Each customer who can readily afford the extra expense could make sure of having clean soap and a clean brush, by having his own shaving-mug, brush and soap. He might also have his own razor. As a further but not superfluous precaution, it might be exacted that instruments after washing be dipped in some convenient antiseptic solution. Such measures as these require but little time to carry them out. They are needful in order to insure immunity from contagion, and the poorest will find them worth a small addition to the barber's fee.—N. Y. Ledger.

Martha Only Human.

Crusty Old Parent—It seems to me the height of folly, Martha, for a girl to leave her home, with all its cheerful surroundings, to take a sleigh-ride on a bitter night like this.

Martha (putting on her wraps)—Yes, papa, but there are cheerful—er—surroundings in taking a sleigh-ride.—Chicago Tribune.

"German Syrup"

I must say a word as to the efficacy of German Syrup. I have used it in my family for Bronchitis, the result of Colds, with most excellent success. I have taken it myself for Throat Troubles, and have derived good results therefrom. I therefore recommend it to my neighbors as an excellent remedy in such cases. James T. Durette, Earlysville, Va. FOR THE CHILDREN.

My little girl suffered for three years from a large Abscess on her hip, the result of a fall and dislocation. The Abscess was large, with six openings, all of which discharged puss. I was induced by friends to give her S. S. S., and by the time the fifth bottle was finished the Abscess was entirely healed, and the child was well and happy.—Mrs. J. A. WIEGNER, Slatington, Pa.

I had three little girls who were attacked with obstinate ECZEMA or Blood Trouble, which at first resembled heat, but soon grew to yellow blisters, some of them quite large. One of the children died from the effects of it, but we got Swift's Specific and gave to the other two, and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The cure was wonderful—J. D. RAINS, Marthaville, La.

S. S. S. has no equal for Children. It relieves the system promptly, and assists nature in developing the child's health. Our Treatise mailed free.

EASTER SONG.

"CHRIST is risen!" far and near,
Skies in bluest tints appear.
What this wonder fair can be
Timid flowers step forth and see.
Wake, oh! blossoms, one and all;
Birds, begin your welcoming call;
Each your sweetest tribute bring
At the rising of the King.

Mosses, haste! a carpet spread,
Softest green where He shall tread.
Lilies white, before His feet
Pour your cups of incense sweet.
Crocus, let your torches glow
Where His gracious steps shall go;
Ring, oh! harebells, gayly ring
At the advent of the King.

At His coming, trembling stand,
Aspen trees on either hand,
Cowslips wake from dewy sleep,
Mosses o'er their shoulders peep,
Wondering-eyed the violets peer,
Well they know His step is near,
Sing, oh! robins, gayly sing
At the coming of the King.

Lo! He comes. In bush and tree
Birds are wild with song and glee,
In mad haste the babbling rill
Tumbles down the rocky hill.
Look, Oh! look. He comes and now
Bending low the grasses bow,
Maples wide your banners fling
At the glory of the King.

He is here. So let us lay
Something at His feet to-day,
That above earth's treasures free
He will prize. What shall it be?
Hearts, made holy for His sake,
Let us each before Him take,
While all lands exultant ring
With the praise of Christ, our King.

GLORY'S EASTER.

SORROWFULLY Glory Murphy lay upon her little cot-bed staring out of the window. Not that there was anything pleasant or interesting to look at, for she lived in a narrow alley and could see only the bare brick walls of the house across the way, with the exception of a bit of blue sky which was now and then visible, as the clothes on Mrs. Maguire's pulley lines were tossed up and down by the wind.

But the breeze had now almost entirely died down and Mr. Maguire's Sunday shirt hung limp and motionless in the glare of the August afternoon, all unconscious of the fact that it was shutting out completely the small square of sky which the lame child in the dark little room loved to gaze upon.

Glory's bed was a hard one—so hard and lumpy and soiled that you would not care to lie upon it for an hour even, and yet this poor child had lain there ever since she was two years old, and she was now thirteen. Eight-year-old Maggie used to be left in charge of the house while her mother went out for a day's washing or cleaning, and one day little, over-burdened Maggie had let the baby-sister fall and she had never taken a step since.

Maggie was grown up now and was stitching busily upon the machine, for she did tailoring, and, though the sun's rays beat down upon the tin roof overhead and the air was close and sultry, yet it would not do to stop work, for she must earn enough to buy food for herself and Glory and to pay the rent of the tiny room where they lived.

The mother had toiled for her children as long as she was able, but at last she had fallen sick, and it was only a week ago that some men had come with the rough box which was to serve as her coffin and had carried her away. Day after day Glory lay on her little bed and grieved and refused to be comforted. Miss Gay, a young lady who visited the sick people in the neighborhood, bringing them jellies and all kinds of nourishing food, often came to see Glory, and many were the oranges and gay picture-books which she brought to brighten the child's weary life. Glory liked nothing so well as a visit from Miss Gay. She loved to touch the pretty soft dress and to breathe in whiffs of the delicate perfume with which the lady's handkerchief was scented.

After Glory's mother died Miss Gay often talked to the child and tried to comfort her by telling her of the happy place to which her mother had gone and how she was no longer tired, nor hungry, nor sick. But glory could not believe this. She knew that her mother had been carried away and buried, and she was sure she would never see her again.

"They took her off and put her in the ground and heaped it all on top of her and I know she is not happy," said Glory.

Miss Gay then told her about that first Easter Sunday so long ago and of Him who came out of the dark grave, but Glory would not be comforted.

As Maggie sat stitching on the machine and her sister lay gazing out of the window, they heard footsteps ascending the narrow, rickety stairs, and to Glory's great delight Miss Gay appeared in the doorway. In her hand she held a beautiful dark-red rose, which she gave to Glory as she sat down by her bedside. This rose, with its rich, velvety petals and its delicious fragrance, was a wonderful thing to the sick child, but it did not mean to her what it means to you. Perhaps you will not believe it, but this was actually the first flower she had ever seen, and though it seemed very beautiful she did not dream that it was a living thing—that it had grown from a tiny green bud into this lovely flower.

After talking awhile Miss Gay proceeded to unfold some plans she had been making, and before she was half through Glory's eyes were shining with excitement. Miss Gay had consulted a doctor about the child and he thought there might be a possibility of curing her if she could be in some place where she could be carefully taken care of, and Miss Gay proposed that she go to a hospital situated not far from the alley where she now lived and let this doctor try to cure her. It would take many months and then he would not, perhaps, be successful. But, after talking it over, Maggie agreed with Miss Gay that it would be worth trying; and as the lady promised to bear all the expense and Glory agreed to lie still a whole year if she could only walk around at the end of that time, it was decided that in the morning she should go to the hospital.

She cried a little next day at parting from Maggie, but her sister was to come to see her every Saturday, so she choked back the tears and drove off with a smiling face, waving her hand to Mrs. Maguire and her six children, who were crowded at the window to see her off.

When they arrived at the hospital Glory forgot all lonesomeness in the wonder with which she gazed at the two long rows of tiny white beds stretching down the whole length of the room. To her eyes, unaccustomed to anything but the dingy room and its battered furniture, everything looked very grand; and when, after having a warm bath and a cup of delicious broth, she was laid in one of the beds, with its fresh, clean sheets and snowy counterpane, it seemed as if she were in another world from the one in which she had been living.

As the weeks went on the careful nursing and the strengthening food did wonders for Glory, but it was often very hard for her to lie there patiently day after day with the poor lame leg held down by heavy weights. Once in awhile the doctor would remove the bandages, and would appear satisfied with the result of his examination.

One day in December Miss Gay came in with two small parcels in her hand and sat down by Glory's side. She undid the larger bundle and disclosed to the child's wondering eyes a flower pot, filled with moist earth. She had never seen a flower pot nor a growing plant, for all her life had been spent on a bed in an attic, and though she had heard people speak of trees and green grass, she had no idea that they were living, growing things. Miss Gay next opened the other parcel and showed Glory a round whitish-brown object, asked her if she could tell what it was. "It looks something like an onion, only different," ventured the little invalid but Miss Gay shook her head.

"No, it is something nicer than an onion; and now I will show you a wonder," and she scooped a little hole in the earth which filled the flower pot. "I am going to bury this in the ground, and cover it all up and leave it."

"Just as they left poor mother," put in Glory plaintively.

"Yes, just as they did your mother, and when you see what a wonderful thing comes to this dead looking root, perhaps you will find it easier to believe what a beautiful change has come for your m other."

So the lady covered the bulb and Glory helped to pat down the earth with her thin little hand, and then the pot was placed on the window ledge close by the bed. Miss Gay would not tell Glory what she was to expect, but bidding her look at the flower pot every morning and some day her patience would be rewarded, she left her. The moment the child waked the next morning she looked eagerly toward the window, but the earth in the pot looked just as it had the night before, and as day after day went by and as Glory could see no change she began to lose hope. But one sunny morning as she glanced towards the flower pot she gave a little cry of delight, for there was a curious green thing pushing up through the earth. It felt hard and smooth when she touched it with her fingers, and she wondered how it came there. The next morning it was longer and greener, and the next day, to the little watcher's great delight, it began to unfold some beautiful green leaves.

Those of you who have always seen plants growing all about you cannot imagine what a marvelous thing this lily was to Glory as it shot up its long stem and added leaf after leaf, until it grew so tall that the nurse had to set it upon the floor. The child talked to it and loved it as other children love and play with their kittens and dolls, and it helped her through many weary hours when her poor little body was full of aches and pains.

When the warm, bright days of March came the lily seemed to rejoice in the sunshine which came streaming in at the window, and one day it unfolded its leaves and showed Glory what she called a nest of little green eggs. These grew larger and whiter each day until one morning, when Miss Gay came, Glory told her the largest one pointed at her like a long white finger.

"To-morrow will be Easter Sunday, dear, and I hope it will be a happy one for you. The doctor is going to let you try to walk a little to-morrow."

Then how Glory's brown eyes sparkled and how long it seemed to wait for the next day. In the morning, as she lay half asleep, listening to the Easter chimes, she became conscious that the air was filled with a delicious perfume. Could Miss Gay have come so early, she wondered, as she quickly opened her eyes, but no, there was only the nurse down at the further end of the room. Then Glory looked over to the window, and there was a beautiful white flower bending toward her and sending out its fragrance.

"I'm not sad about mother any more," she said, after a few moments, looking up at Miss Gay, who had just come in with the doctor. "This lovely thing came out of its dark grave, and now I believe what you said about the first Easter," and Glory reached up and kissed the lily's soft petals.

Just then the nurse came with a bowl of hot broth, after which the doctor said that now they would try what could be accomplished in the way of walking. She trembled with excitement when the doctor lifted her and gently stood her upon the floor and it was a proud and happy moment when she staggered to a chair that stood near. Very stumbling and uncertain steps they were, but it was walking, and the first walking that Glory ever remembered having done. When she again lay in her bed with the lily bending over her and when she heard the doctor saying that in a month she should walk home to Maggie, she felt that her Easter was indeed a joyful one.—N. Y. World.

COMFORTING THOUGHTS.

Blessedness a Better Estate Than Happiness.

To be blessed is better than to be happy, and this thought presses closely upon us in the midst of the joyous Easter music and the fragrant Easter bloom. More solemn, more splendid, than any other great festival of the Christian year, this appeals to the best in our nature, and lifts us up to a higher level than the low plane of our daily life. "The Lord is risen!" chanted by choirs, thundered from organs, uttered by sweet-faced children as they bring their Easter offerings to the house of prayer, is the key to the melody and mirth of Easter day, and its arch of promise spans every new-made grave, and gives a pledge of reunion in every broken household circle.

To some homes Easter always comes with a sense of sorrowful contrast. Bear itself bravely as it may, the soul which has gone down into the depths never gets entirely over the agony of the bitter plunge. Our loss is always set over against our gain in this changeful world, where our earthly wealth is largely made of love. It is the home darlings who delight our eyes, cheat us of our cares, give us a reason for our toiling and our saving, our spending and our earning. With what a wrench we give them up! Mothers know how they miss the children who have gone, whose vacant places can never be filled, who always remain their little ones, while the others grow out of the nursery, go to school and to college, or take upon themselves the burdens and duties of mature life. After awhile the pain is less constant than at first, for in length of days there is surcease of sorrow; but the time never comes when the old wound does not sometimes ache under the scar, and especially does the old grief wake in the blithe, sweet, jubilant anniversaries, at Christmas, at the New Year, at Easter, when the tide of gladness is at flood and the full cups overbrim, while the empty ones more than ever show their poverty and lack.

But Easter is a festival of comfort. "The Lord is risen!" Utter it reverently. This is not the only sphere of being, nor this room in the universe the whole of the Father's house. We are going on to a fuller, richer life, the life everlasting, and our Lord has led the way. Be very sure, sad heart, that you shall find your own again. Be very strong, for the "old, old fashion of immortality" is the heritage of you and yours. Be very calm, even in the midst of agitation, for Easter brings you the thought of the tranquil home where they go no more out forever. And while the songs rise, and the children play, and the world puts on her beautiful garments woven of sun and dew, remember again that blessedness is a better estate than happiness.—Harper's Bazar.

THE SPRING GIRL.

The winter girl is going and the summer girl is coming;
The buds are on the trees, and the birds begin to sing,
And we're nearing fast the time when we'll hear the bees a-humming,
For already earth rejoices with the promise of the spring.

The winter girl and summer girl have charms, there's no denying—
The one in furs rejoicing, the other in pique;
But for the maiden of the spring no lover is there sighing—
No vernal poet yet to her has sung a tuneful lay.

And yet we know she's fairer, sweeter than the two together,
In her handsome new spring bonnet and her raiment fine and gay;
She's like the lily and the rose in one when fine's the weather,
And she walks to church with modest air on joyous Easter day.

Talk not about your winter or your summer girls, I pray you,
The furs and sealskins of the one, the other's furbelows;
But go to church with me on Easter Sunday—'twill repay you—
And see the spring girl blooming in her bonnet and new clothes.

—Boston Courier.

—The Germans have a custom of hiding the Easter eggs on Easter eve, under the bushes and in the thickest tufts of grass; if the weather is unpropitious, they secrete them in nooks about the house, and the children have a merry time finding them in the early Easter morn.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—To clean ermine and all white fur, rub with corn meal, renewing the meal as it becomes soiled.—Detroit Free Press.

Lemon Pudding: One cup of sugar, one-half a cup of butter, one lemon, one-half a dozen butter crackers dissolved in one-half pint of milk. Beat the butter and sugar to a cream, add the yolks of the eggs, the crackers and milk. Bake. Beat the whites of the eggs to a froth, sweeten, cover the top of the pudding with this and set back in the oven to brown delicately.—Detroit Free Press.

—Lobster Croquettes: A lobster well cooked and chopped, season with salt and mace. Measure the meat and mix with one-fourth the quantity of bread crumbs—very fine—melt two tablespoons of butter and mix into lobster and crumbs; make it into egg-shaped balls—small ones—pulverize some crackers, beat an egg, dip balls in egg, then in cracker crumbs and fry in butter. Serve at once dry.—Home.

—Roasted Oyster Crackers: Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a bowl with half a pint of boiling water. When the butter is melted, put in a pint and a half of oyster crackers, stirring them well, that all may get a slight coating of the butter and water. Spread the crackers in a shallow pan and put in a hot oven for ten or twelve minutes. They should be brown and glossy at the end of that time. Serve in a deep dish, with the oyster soup.—Good Housekeeping.

—Beef Stew With Onions: Cut two pounds of tender beef into small pieces, and season with pepper and salt; slice one or two onions and add to it, with water enough in a stew pan to make a gravy. Let it stew slowly till the beef is thoroughly cooked; then add some pieces of butter rolled in flour, enough to make a rich gravy. Cold beef may be cooked in the same way, but the onions must then be cooked before adding them to the meat. Add more water if it dries too fast, but let it be boiling when poured in.—Boston Budget.

—Italian Blanc Mange; Soak half a package of gelatine for fifteen minutes in enough cold water to cover; put a quart of milk in the farina boiler, and when it comes to boiling point stir in the gelatine a teaspoonful of vanilla and the yolks of four eggs (which have been beaten light with half a cup of sugar) and cook for half a minute, stirring all the time; then remove from the range and allow it to cool until it just begins to thicken, then add the stiffened whites of the eggs, beat well and pour into a buttered mold holding three pints. May be served with whipped cream or soft custard.—N. Y. World.

—French Almond Bread: Into a mixing-bowl put the yelks of six eggs, two whole eggs, one-half pound white sugar and three ounces ground almonds. Whisk into a stiff batter for fifteen minutes, add a drop of essence of lemon and one-half pound flour. Spread the mixture about three-quarters of an inch thick into a buttered and papered baking-tin, and bake to a light brown in a moderate oven. When cooked let it get cold, spread the top with apple jelly, then with icing, and strew some chopped candied fruits over the top. Cut into squares, diamonds, rounds, rings or any shaped preferred and serve in a glass or dish.—Housekeeper.

Sashes That Are the Mode.

The new sashes which are to be fashionable next season are very wide, very elegant, and not so very expensive, considering their quality and device. Five yards are often used where the wearer is tall and elects for the Louis Quinze sash, the ends of which reach quite to the foot of the dress skirt. Some of the new Russian blouses for young girls are made of the gay Persian sash-ribbons, with a trimming of the same at the hem of the dress skirt, or showing as a simulated petticoat between the slashings of the outside skirt with a sash of the same at the back of the blouse, or looped at one side if preferred. The rich Louis XIV. sashes show wide stripes of watered silks alternating with those of silk or satin, with bright pompadour figures scattered in artistic groups down these stripes. The floral patterns in some of these beautiful novelties are exquisitely colored and blended. Shot-silk sashes are shown in which violet changes into gold, white into silvery blue, gray into Roman red, olive into rose and gold, black into gold and ecru into gold and palest water-green.—N. Y. Post.

The Russian Skirt.

A new device of the dressmakers gives the effect of a long Russian blouse, and is what was formerly called a double skirt. It is simply a bell skirt lining covered with the dress material up above the knees, and bordered at the foot with a ruche. Overlapping this from the belt down is a shorter skirt of the material, shaped precisely like the lining, and bordered with a ruche like that of the foot. This upper skirt represents the lower part of the long Russian blouse, and is worn with a round waist with edges extending over the top of the skirt and concealing the join. It is extremely pretty when made of black India silk, with a ruche of box-plaited Brussels net or of velvet ribbon bordering the skirts.—Harper's Bazar.

For Winter Evenings.

The mother or the daughter of the family is naturally expected to provide entertainment for the long winter evenings, and it often requires an unsuspected amount of generalship and forethought to prepare amusement that is interesting and sufficiently profitable. An excellent and easily-executed plan provides for the reading and subsequent discussion of one or more articles or stories in a favorite periodical. A serial sometimes furnishes a very good starting-point for argument, speculation and invention for a family, and a single article has been known to supply material for study for a fortnight.

Home From Florida.

Eveline—Mabel, dear, the gentleman we just passed was Mr. Trotter, whom we met at Fernandina.

Mabel—So it was. Oh, Evy, let us drive from this place before he recognizes me!

Eveline—But I thought you liked him.

Mabel—And so I do. But this is the same suit I wore the last time we met, and—and—what would he think of me if he saw it again?—Judge.

—The Style of Them.—She was looking in a tailorshop window when Mr. Softie came up and with a lisping twitter remarked: "Ah, Miss Sharply, what is the style for men?" "I am,' she replied sweetly, and she walked off without him.

LOVE FOR HUMANITY

THE GREAT WORDS OF GREAT MEN.

INTERESTING FACTS AND FACES.

The orator before the Senate called this "an age of progress." He was wrong. "Progress" does not half express it; it is an age of revolution. Revolutions carried on, not by armies, but by discoverers, inventors and brain-workers. It is a marvelous age, an age when the ordinary will not be accepted, when the best is demanded. Our grandfathers were content to travel in stage coaches, to live in cabins and receive a mail once a week. We demand palace cars, tasteful homes and daily communication with the world. It is the rapid-transit age; the age of the telegraph and the telephone. A man speaks to-day and the entire world reads his words to-morrow morning. There are but twenty-four hours in the day, but forty-eight hours are crowded into it.

We all know how we have advanced materially. Do we realize how we have advanced scientifically? More than in any other manner. Indeed, it has been the advancement in science which has caused the advancement in material things. The discovery of steam permitted the railroad and the steamboat. The development of electricity made possible the telegraph and the telephone, so that the development of the sciences has been the real cause of all modern advancement.

We will take, for example, one department of science, but the most important department. One which affects our very lives and happiness. Formerly the treatment of human ills was made a matter of superstition, of incantation, the same as it is by the medicine men of the Indians to-day. Gradually emerging from such blindness, it was still a matter of bigotry, of folly. What people must have suffered in those days can scarcely be imagined. They were bled, they were cupped, they were leeched, they were subjected to every device whereby their vitality could be reduced and their lives endangered. It is almost a wonder that the race survived.

PROF. DR. KOCH, BERLIN.

WILLIAM EDWARD ROBESON, M.R.C.S.I., L. K. Q. C. I.
Late of the Royal Navy of England.

There has been an absolute revolution in the practice of medicine and in the treatment of human ills. Instead of undermining the vital forces by cupping and bleeding, the vitality is now sustained in every possible manner. Instead of tearing down we seek to build up. Instead of increasing misery we seek to create happiness.

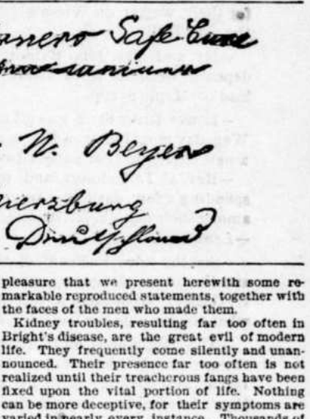
But the greatest advancement in medical science has been made by discovery. Harvey could afford to endure the ridicule of the world for revealing to it the grand discovery of the circulation of the blood. Jenner might be ostracized, but millions have benefited by his discovery of vaccination. Pasteur lived in a more enlightened age and escaped ridicule, while the world received the benefit which his discoveries have brought. Koch, although forced to reveal his discovery before its perfection, will be revered by future generations.

The discoveries of these great men have been of untold benefit to the world, and yet they were not in the line of the world's greatest need. Mankind has been suffering, enduring, dying from a cause far greater than small-pox, more terrible than hydrophobia and more subtle than consumption. The habits of modern life, the very inventions which have made civilization so great, have drained the vital forces of life and undermined the organs that sustain life. Ten years ago this great truth was realized by a gentleman whose own life was in sore jeopardy, and the discovery which he has given to the world has done and is doing more to-day to strengthen the vitality, lessen suffering, preserve the health and lengthen life than any of the discoveries of the other great men above mentioned. The discovery referred to was made by Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, N. Y., and is known in Europe, in America, and throughout the world as Warner's Safe Cure.

It may perhaps be thought that the above assertion is an extravagant one, and so it would be were not the unquestionable proofs present to verify it. Within the past few years the claims made more than ten years ago have been admitted by the highest scientific authorities, both in Europe and America, and it is with pleasure that we present herewith some remarkable reproduced statements, together with the faces of the men who made them.

DR. BEYER, OF WURZBURG, GERMANY.

I fully endorse Warner's Safe Cure in every instance in which I have prescribed it.
Dr. Beyer
Wurzburg



DR. DIO LEWIS.

If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble I should at once use Warner's Safe Cure
Dio Lewis

DR. R. A. GUNN,
Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and Editor of the Medical Tribune.

I emphatically state that I have been able to give more relief and effect more cures by the use of Warner's Safe Cure than by all the medicines in the British Pharmacopoeia
Wm Edw Robson

I prescribe and use Warner's Safe Cure in both acute and chronic Bright's disease and am willing to acknowledge and recommend it most heartily
R A Gunn M.D.

Kidney troubles, resulting far too often in Bright's disease, are the great evil of modern life. They frequently come silently and unannounced. Their presence far too often is not realized until their treacherous fangs have been fixed upon the vital portion of life. Nothing can be more deceptive, for their symptoms are varied in nearly every instance. Thousands of persons have been their victims without realizing or knowing what it is that afflicted them. Thousands are suffering to-day who do not know the cause.

Mr. Albert Cunning, Newmarket, Ia.: "Six years ago last winter I was taken suddenly with severe pains in my side and back. They continued so severe I was finally compelled to take to my bed and called a doctor. After attending me for about a week he advised me to try Warner's Safe Cure, saying it had been used with good results in cases of kidney and liver trouble and he could do me no good towards curing the disease, but only relieve the pain to some extent. I became very weak, and my urine resembled bloody milk. After taking two or three bottles I began to improve, and after using seven bottles I was entirely cured."

Mr. C. E. Drake, Avoca, Ia.: "About nine years ago I was taken with what proved to be Bright's disease and inflammation of the bladder. I commenced to doctor with our local physicians, one after another, and continued this for two years. They did not understand my case and treated me for most everything. Somehow or other I concluded to try Warner's Safe Cure. I began to feel easier almost from the start, and after taking three bottles felt completely cured."

Mrs. W. A. Doran, Moingona, Ia: "Seven years ago I was given up by my physician that I would die. I had kidney trouble, but thanks to your Safe Cure, which I commenced taking, and was relieved."

Mrs. J. Jones, Murray, Ia.: "A number of years ago I became troubled with kidney and liver troubles. My bowels were constipated and severe pains in my back. I tried several remedies which I heard of without doing me much if any good. I finally concluded to try a bottle of your Safe Cure. I began to improve almost from the start and finally felt like myself again."

The discovery made by Mr. H. H. Warner has been acknowledged throughout both hemispheres to be the only discovery for this great modern evil now known to the world. Like all great discoveries, it has had its enemies and met with opposition, but its marvelous popularity with the public has been phenomenal and its complete acknowledgment by scientists and the professions has been deserved. It stands, as it deserves to stand, upon a plane of its own, pre-eminent among all prominent discoveries for the relief of humanity and the promotion of happiness.

PICK OF LANDS
In order to close a large New York estate it is necessary to place on the market at low prices, and on easy terms, a lot of choice farm lands, selected at an early day by a prominent official of the Northern Pacific R. R., from the celebrated wheat region in the Eastern portion of North Dakota. These lands are in a well settled prosperous region near the railroad and convenient to churches, schools and markets, and must be sold within a short time. Especially adapted for colonies. Immediate application will be necessary to secure any portion of them. For full particulars address J. K. WEST, DETROIT LAKE, Minnesota.

DELANO DIARY.

—Next Sunday will be Easter.

—Good Friday was observed today, by many of the citizens.

—Complaint is made that hungry dogs are living on neighbors chickens.

—An unusually large consignment of freight was left at the G. N. Railroad depot today.

—The Band boys are building a house for their wagon on Wiese's lots near the City Hall.

—Mr. and Mrs. John Batdorf, of Indepence were in town today with a load of Maple Syrup.

—Lower River Stret was all agog on Wensday morning over the arrival of a new citizen in that part of town.

—Rev. C. L. Lehnert and wife are spending a few days in town visiting among their many relatives and friends. —LeSueur News.

—See the advertisement of the Delano Furniture Company, successors to H. Galley. Give them a call and see what they can do for you.

—The Eagle hops on to Ic Murphy, Carver county democrats, Rev. Mr. Davies and whoever don't toe her line. Don't be afraid of her gentleman, her chronic reputation as a kicker is established.

—A sociable and oyster supper will be held for the benefit of the M. E. church in that circuit at the residence of Jake Bryant, Sr. on the Watertown and Minneapolis road on Saturday evening April 16.

—A Teachers' meeting will be held in Delano, on Saturday, April 23d, opening at 9:45 A. M. These meetings are becoming quite interesting and should be attended by teachers and others interested in education.

—Prof. Willis E. Johnson who has been teaching near Cokato returned with his family to this place for a short vacation before commencing another term near the one taught in during the winter. We understand the Prof. intends moving to St. Cloud to attend the Normal School for awhile and further prepare him for his profession.

—This week the farmer in this vicinity has been the busy man and seeding time having arrived has "withheld not his hand" but distributed the grain broadcast over his fields in anticipation of the early and latter rains and the harvest time when he will garner into his barns the golden sheaves. A large acerage has been put into crop this week.

—Rev. Mr. Savage, the agent of the Home of the Friendless, found a home for a little four year old boy in the family of A. J. Wright, and Ernst Bode and wife have accepted the task and pleasure of bringing up a pair of those homeless children. The two little ones taken by the Bode family are brother and sister.—LeSueur News.

—The Fair on Saturday was well attended and quite a number of calves and other small animals found buyers. There seems to be a scarcity of such articles in the markets so soon this season. When the convention time arrives and the lake visitors are numerous farmers that have produce to market will doubtless find ready sale for all they can furnish.

—On Thursday the Health officer received a notice from the Secretary of the State Board of Health at Red Wing that Jno. Brodel and Andres Skogg, two emigrants from S. S., City of Berlin, having been exposed to or having had measels were enroute to Delano and requesting a report. The Minnesota State Board are using every precaution to guard the citizens of the State against contagious diseases and deserve the assistance of all.

—Farmers wives and children who have control, usually of the poultry department of the farm will doubtless do well this year in this county if they attend strictly to business and have ready for market along about the first week in June a fine lot of chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys and eggs. The Republican convention to be held June 7, in Minneapolis will bring an unusual number of summer visitors to the cities and lakes and being so handy by as we are market for eatables of all kinds is apt to be good.

—Dame rumor has, for some time been busily at work circulating stories of mid'night adventures of several young ladies in places where they would not wish the glimmer of an electric light to be thrown on them. Rumors have been confirmed until now the whole outfit is becoming town gossip and names of parties not so very young have been connected with the affairs. The village Marshal now has police powers and unless Dame Rumors mouth is closed by a cessation of the proceedings a racy trial in court will probably be forthcoming in the near future.

—Read the new Ad. of Deering Bros. and consult their agents, Bock Bros. in Delano or O. C. Roberts, Rockford, before buying anything in their line.

—Quite a delegation from Delano visited the Watertown school on Tuesday afternoon and was pleased to see the enterprise manifested by repairing in so neat a manner the school house, also at the beautiful appearance of the school park. The teachers, Mr. Dean and Miss Peters are giving good satisfaction. Prof. Dean is a graduate of the Mankato Normal School and we understand intends to follow the profession of his choice, teaching, for a living. He is a young man yet but should he continue as he has started out he will soon be counted among the most efficient workers in the ranks of Minnesota's popular educators.

—Read "Historical Facts" this week for an account of early roads and mail routes and those who participated in their establishment and building in the pioneer days in the country between Minneapolis or St. Anthony's Falls and the Crow River. Our Historian, the Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, is proving himself an adept at the art of writing up the incidents and historical facts of this part of the country in which he has spent a considerable portion of his life. We have on hand a few of each number from the commencement of the "Historical Facts" Jany. 1. Those subscribing desiring to date their subscription back to that time can be accomodated, thereby getting a history not otherwise to be obtained of this region of country.

Mrs. W. W. Palm, of Minneapolis, visited relatives in Delano on Monday.

J. H. McGary, the unterrified of Independence, was in town on Wednesday.

Charley Workman and family and Mrs. John Sleight, of Rockford, visited friends in Delano on Sunday.

County Cullings.

Hon. H. C. Bull and Dr. Catlin attended the Cleveland Club banquet at Minneapolis on Wednesday night.

Dr. O'Hair and Commissioner Flannigan, of Waverly, and Hon. Frank Latham, of Howard, visited the cities on Wednesday.

Editor Tanner, of the Tribune, was not at the Cleveland Club banquet. It was noted for being a banquet without stimulants. Perhaps the editor feared he might be riding two horses if he attended.

The Waverly Tribune, this week, accuses us of trying to ride two horses traveling in opposite directions and intimates that we have not the moral courage to express our own convictions and that in this case "there may be policy in keeping correspondents who have." And further offers to give pointers at any time and on the shortest notice to us or our staff.

We are of opinion, from the article above referred to, that the sporting part of the Waverly Tribune don't know much about equestrianship, not much more than it does about "moral courage to express its own convictions." As for our correspondents, we think they can take care of themselves and when we want some pointers on nominating Republicans on Democratic tickets for policy's sake, and such we knew before that the Tribune could furnish them.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 8, 1892.

Harrison, Morton and "boodle", furnished by Wall street and protected manufacturers, was the combination that brought the present administration into existence, and notice has just been served upon Republican aspirants to the Vice Presidential nomination, by no less a personage than Vice President Morton himself, that the same combination has been formed to run the Republican National machine again this year. There was a disposition some time ago to freeze Mr. Morton out of the combination because of his unwillingness to pledge himself to raise the amount of money named by Chairman Clarkson as necessary to pay for his renomination, and the impression was allowed to go out that Mr. Morton did not care for a renomination. But since the withdrawal of Mr. Blaine, Mr. Morton has reconsidered the matter, and agreed to pay the price demanded, and now he naively announces that he will accept a renomination should it be tendered him by the Minneapolis convention.

Speaker Crisp found it necessary, previous to the passage of the Springer free wool bill by the House, to administer a lesson in parliamentary law and good manners to Representative Burrows, of Michigan, who in the absence of ex-Czar Reed was attempting to play his role, and it will be a lon time before the scene is forgotten by those who witnessed it. Mr. Burrows, who has a voice that has been likened to a fog horn, stood up shouting, "I insist" — when he was interrupted by the sharp command of the Speaker, "the gentleman from Michigan will resume his seat." One glance at the determined face of the Speaker, and Mr. Burrows dropped into his seat, looking like a cowed dog.

If there is any truth in the rumor that Whitelaw Reid's resignation as minister to France is tendered in order that he may be free to manipulate a new Blaine boom, Mr. Reid is entitled to the champion belt as a prevaricator. He was in town for three days this week, and he spent the most of that time with Mr. Blaine, and when asked about the rumor he said, "Mr. Blaine is not a candidate. He meant every word he said in his letter. I think Mr. Harrison will be renominated with very little opposition."

The House Committee on Mines and Mining has made a favorable report on Representative Cammeti's bill for a new executive department of the Government, to be known as the department of Mines and Mining, and transfering thereto the Geological survey and the Mint. The bill also provides that all mineral lands are to be sold under the direction of the new department.

Senator Sherman is about the last man that a newspaper man with any Washington experience would go to in search of news having any connection with his official position, but from another source it is learned that the Chinese minister has in an unofficial way served notice on Senator Sherman that his government would at once sever diplomatic relations with the United States, if the Chinese exclusion bill, which has been passed by the House becomes a law. Senator Sherman is chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, before which the bill now is, which accounts for his having been honored by the minister with this ultimatum. The impression here is that the minister may as well make his arrangements to leave unless he can persuade Mr. Harrison to veto the bill as it is expected to go through the Senate with a relative majority as large as it received in the House.

"The present magnetic executive," is the language in which Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, refered sneeringly to Mr. Harrison in a speech on the silver resolutions of Senator Morgan, and he added to the sting by saying that Mr. Harrison was to be renominated, with negative unanimity; not because he was the choice of any considerable body of his party, but because no man of greater stature had been found willing to stand. Evidently Senator Wolcott will not be asked to take the stump for Harrison, Morton and "boodle."

Senator Morgan wants to know why the reciprocity negotiations with Mexigo failed, and when Senator Hale's resolution calling for copies of all reciprocity agreements and treaties was taken up by the Senate, he offered an amendment, which was agreed to, calling for information about the Mexican negotiations and the cause of their failure.

The Democratic members of the House committee on Ways and Means expect the House to pass within the next two weeks the bills for free cotton ties and bagging, free binding twine, and the bill reducing the duty on tin plate to one cent per pound, which was the duty before the McKinley law was enacted.

The Senate has voted against striking out the clause in the Indian appropriation bill, directing the President to detail army officers to act as Indian agents, as vacancies occur.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

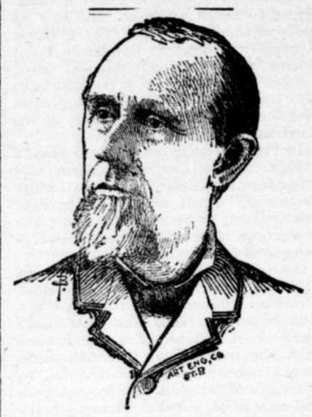
BUFFALO GAZETTE



For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

THE Hon. Thomas Wilson, whose picture and name as a candidate for Governor we placed at the head of our columns last week without comment still stands. Comment on the propriety of this nomination seems almost unnecessary. He is one of Minnesota's brainiest men. Has held offices of honor and trust legislative and judicial and in the halls of Congress where he was a credit to his constituents. Two years ago he made a splendid campaign and formed many fast friends wherever he went. He has only to commence where he left off at that time and with Cleveland at the head of the ticket, Thomas Wilson for Governor and a good straight Democratic ticket, on to the end, and tariff reform for the issue the victory is ours as against the "boodle" and scheming and high protective tariff battle cry of the G. O. P. Independent voters will rally to this ticket and aid in its election.

BOB LINCOLN bobs up as a possible Presidential candidate. His claim to an ancestorial hat is as good as that of the present incumbent.

THE recent investigation of the wheat business is stirring up quite an excitement among the voters in Minnesota. The minority report is at least no whitewashing affair.

ONE of the speakers at the Cleveland banquet in Minneapolis the other night brought down the house while referring to his reasons for leaving the Republican party and becoming a single tax man. He said the arguments of the G. O. P. had grown old and threadbare and about their only stock in trade now was to set and hoot, Who? Who? Who put down the Rebellion?

J. RUSSEL YOUNG who was discharged from his position as a clerk in the U. S. Senate lately appealed through Vice President Morton to that body for vindication, claiming that after 15 years of faithful services he was at least entitled to a hearing before being discharged for giving away the secrets of the Senate on the Behring's Sea difficulty. From his statement backed up by that of others, it would seem as if this privelege should have been accorded him.

Tariff Pictures.

The best test of a community's prosperity is the amount of its savings. In Great Britain under free trade the savings bank deposits are $14 per capita.

$90 per capita.

--New York Press.

Some of the people in Minnesota would be glad to have someone come around with their share if they are entitled to as much as in New York. $90 would help most any of our gophers to square up accounts to say nothing of depositing in the savings bank.

S. M. OWEN, who ran for Governor on the Alliance ticket in 1890, and who many thought, would this time accept a nomination as a fusion candidate of the Alliance and Democratic parties from the Minneapolis Journal's recent interview we learn has no notion of doing anything of the kind but, true to his principles will, as he did two years ago, refuse to be a fusion candidate if it is offered him. He takes the same view the GAZETTE expressed some weeks ago that a fusion between these two parties would but serve to force the Independent Republicans back into the ranks of the G. O. P. with which they do not wish longer to officiate though not ready to embrace Democracy in all cases just yet. Mr. Owens further says, "I do not approve of the St. Louis platform in every respect but it is certainly a great improvement over the Cincinatti and Oacalo platforms" "There are planks in every platform which we do not all approve." Concerning the subject among other things he says:

"I never saw so much smoke for so little fire. I do not think there is the slightest probability of fusion between the Alliance or People's party and the Democrats. There may be a unification here and there, but I do not for a moment entertain the idea that the party leaders will get together and form a stock company, parceling out the nominations as they would issue so much stock, saying to one man, 'you take so much stock,' and to another, 'you will take so many shares in the stock of this close corporation.'"

An Open Letter by Diabolis to the Churches and All Good Temperance People

Dear Brother and Sister.—No! Oh no! I can't say brothers and sisters, because you will not allow me to claim so close a relationship to "your holiness". Well I am sorry, for I really do feel a deep interest in the work you are doing for I am fully aware of the good work you are trying to do, to make our business respectable, (that is the saloon business) for we do not deny that, that is our business, and we are well aware it has become in the eyes of many good church members and many good Republicans disreputable, but that is owing to the kind of men in the business, if there were only good respectable citizens allowed to engage in this business, with a few of your best church members, it would soon become as honorable an avocation as farming, blacksmithing, carpentering, or manufacturing plows, seeders or self-binders.

Now my dear friends do not understand me to be finding fault with the way you treat us, for we thankfully acknowledge that you have treated us as kindly as you possibly could under the circumstances. You seldom quote that twenty second verse of the fifth chapter of Isaiah, which reads like this, "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink." And you have acted very wise and prudent for when you saw anything connected with our business which you could not conscienciously call good, you have been very careful not to call it evil, we feel very grateful to you, dear friends for this, even though you will not permit us to call you bretheren. If you have thought that you saw anything wicked in our business we handed you out a small fee (or bribe) and you justified us. We thank you for that kindness, for we recognize the heroism and selfsacrifice you exhibit in this act for we read in the twentieth verse of the fifth chapter of Isa. that your God has pronounced a woe upon all such persons who do such things but what is that to us? See thou to that. Now do not be frightened and go and hang yourselves as Judas did, for we need your help yet a little while. You have helped us in the past, don't leave us now, for we feel that this is a critical time, the common people are becoming excited over this question as they have never been before. You helped us to elect a Republican President and a Republican Congress, and again we thank you for that, for according to the statement of commissioner Douglas of the District of Columbia, during the year 1889-90, there were granted 465 wholesale liquor licenses and 639 retail liquor licenses, making a total in the national capital of 1158.

These legalized places for the sale, wholesale and retail, of intoxicating liquors were a direct responsibility of a Republican Congress who had the sole control of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia. You Christians and good temperance Republicans helped us to elect that Congress, and we should have been nearly as well satisfied if it had been a Democratic Congress, all the objection we have to the Democrats is they want to make whiskey a little too free, we rather pay a higher license and have fewer saloons. We can regulate it better and make more money, so we have concluded to vote with the Republicans and Christians next fall, (that is if you don't turn Prohibitionists) and we don't anticipate there is much danger in that direction

We hear that you are about to inaugurate a series of prayer meetings and hold s ecial services, where the pastors of the various churches will preach on Sab ath observance, but your praying and your preaching do not alarm us as long as you do not join the "d'd" prohibition party. You see we are firm believers in the Bible, especially in the doctrine that St. Paul preaches, viz: "prayers and even faith without works is dead,". We acknowledge that there are some passages in the Bible that we cannot explain exactly to our satisfaction, such as this, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Now we do not pretend that we are quite brazen-faced enough to deny that our business does sow discord, disease, death, hell and damnation. But that we are obliged to reap all of this we are not quite ready to admit. You know there is such a thing as a man sowing wheat and another man reaping it, and there is such a thing as a man sowing tares for another man to reap. If we believed that we had to reap this crop we would stop sowing but we do not, and we do not think that you believe it for if we have to reap it you will have to help us for you had the power to prevent us from sowing but you took a bribe and said sow, so with you we will run the risk and console ourselves with this thought, if we have to reap, you will have to help us and your good company will help us to bear cheerfully a great deal of misery. So let us "keep a stiff upper lip" and not "get frightened at the hooting of an owl" but stand by each other and help and strengthen each other all we can.

You know that the World's Fair opens in 1893 at Chicago and you know some of the cranky Christians and all the Prohibitionists do not intend to allow us to open at that Exposition on Sunday. Now right here is where we can help each other a great deal, by obeying the golden rule "Do unto others as we would that they should do unto us." Now you want money and we want votes and if you Republicans and good Christians will vote for us to open our saloons on Sunday we can make money "like dirt" and we will be liberal and divide with you for the saloons will be open any way and we may as well have them open according to law, then there will be no temptation to break the law and we shall have law and order and we can sow whisky and reap gold. Yours financially,

A. B. C. DIABOLIS.

Mrs. Conzet's name before her marriage was Elizebeth Beuschlein. Sophia, Mathilda and Henry were born on the place still occupied by Martin and his estimable wife

CORRECTION.

In the issue of March 25th, it was stated that a mail route from Watertown to Minneapolis was established in 1857, which was an error in the matter of the date. The paragraph under the head of "Roads and Mail Routes" in the issue of April 15th alludes to the mail route, giving the correct date, 1856.

Have You Weak Lungs?

If you have, don't wait until the trouble becomes so aggravated that nothing can help you, when you may so easily learn what will be of immediate and permanent benefit,—to you, or any of your friends having pulmonary trouble,—through reading a splendid paper on "The Consumptives' Clime," published in DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for May. This article is handsomely illustrated with numerous views of health resorts and other beautiful places in Colorado, and will interest every robust person, as well as those seeking a congenial clime.

An illustrated paper on "The Grape Fruit" is also seasonable, furnishing valuable information regarding this—to many—unfamiliar fruit, especially about its beneficial qualities as an alterative in the spring. "In Persia's Palaces," with its many illustrations, gives a comprehensive idea of woman's life in that Eastern clime; "Next Summer's Garden" is just in time to be of practical use; there is a Decoration Day story, "The Voodoo Charm," and a Decoration Day poem, "Our Truce," beautifully illustrated, besides other good stories; "Chat" tells about the latest fads; from "Home Art" you can learn "How to Frame Pictures" yourself, and all the other departments are running over with seasonable matter; and, besides three full-page pictures, there are nearly 200 illustrations. Indeed, every member of the family is sure to find something of personal interest in every number of DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, and it is published for only $2 a year, by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 E. 14th St. New York.

DELANO, Wright Co., - MINN.

THE legislature of Massachusetts has concluded that $8,000 a year is about the right price to pay for governor of that state.

GRAVE fears are entertained that Mrs. John A. Logan sustained a serious injury to the spine in the fall she recently had from a camp chair.

MATHIAS HARLEY, who has been postmaster at Fairview village, Chester county, Pa., has resigned after holding that office for thirty-two years.

JOHN H. INMAN, the richest man of the south, was a drummer boy in the confederate army, and when the war was over he did not have a cent or a friend to help him.

EX-GOV. NATHANIEL S. BERRY, of New Hampshire, now 95 years of age, is the oldest of all the living ex-governors. He occupied the executive chair of the Granite state from June, 1861, to June, 1863.

THE army now carries on its retired list thirty-two brigadier generals and four major generals. The quartette of major generals is composed of John Pope, S. S. Carroll, J. C. Robinson and Daniel E. Sickles.

JOHN C. HERMES, better known as "Drum Major Jack," of the Columbus (O.) barracks band, one of the best known drum majors in the United States army, has been placed on the retired list after serving thirty years.

A FEATURE of the series of recent storms in the west was a shower of mud along the line of the Union Pacific railroad in the vicinity of Onago, Kan. The south and east sides of houses were plastered with mud, and a Union Pacific train was so covered that its headlight was invisible. The phenomenon has not been explained.

IT took four electric shocks to kill Jeremiah Catto in the death chamber at Sing Sing recently, and all who were present agree that it was a revolting spectacle. Yet it does not seem wholly impertinent to recall that it required fourteen stabs with a butcher's knife for Mr. Catto to murder the man whose wife he coveted and for the slaughter of whom he has paid the penalty.

A COUPLE in Biddeford, Me., have separated four times and reunited three times since their wedding in May last. The last time the wife returned to her spouse she admitted that she was a little quick tempered, but declared that she would give him fifty dollars if she made another break in six months. She broke away in two weeks and now the husband will sue for the fifty dollars.

A DOCTOR in St. Louis says that melancholia with suicidal impulses, hallucinations, precursory symptoms of insanity, insomnia, crying spells, præcordial anxiety, fears of impending evil, vertigo, beginning of impairment of memory and judging power, and even the lowering of the moral tone are attributable to chronic tobacco intoxication. This may be called hitting the pipe with a sledgehammer.

ELLEN TERRY is mourning the death of her mother, whom she lost recently. There was a more than ordinary love between the two, and English theatergoers remember the sweet-faced old lady who was so regular and admiring an attendant at her daughter's performances. Hers was the face that Ellen looked for on first nights, and if it wore its usual expression of loving pride the great actress was content.

MANY stories are told of Queen Victoria's dislike for tobacco smoke and her restrictions on its use near her palaces, but her latest request, which amounts to an order, appears to be the most radical of all. Recently one of the cabinet ministers received a letter from her private secretary, Sir Henry Ponsonby, saying that her majesty begged that in future he would not send his dispatches saturated with tobacco smoke.

A NEWLY invented device for preventing caterpillars from climbing trees is the winding of the trunk of the trees for a space with alternate wires of copper and zinc so closely that the marauder must touch one wire of each kind at every step of his progress. The result will be an electric shock strong enough to precipitate the villain to the earth. Discouragement and nervous prostration would probably drive the creature to eventual suicide under this treatment.

FEW college classes have contained so many men destined to be distinguished in after life as there were in a class that was graduated nearly half a century ago from an unpretentious and now unknown academy in Frankfort, Ky. In that historic class were B. Gratz Brown, G. G. Vest, T. T. Crittenden, Joe Blackburn, W. C. P. Breckinridge and John Mason Brown. They all lived within a few miles of Frankfort, were brought up as boys together, and were taught by the same quaint old schoolmaster, a man named B. B. Sayers, who had more than a local reputation as a disciplinarian.

THE discovery is made that the Alaska soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to hop-raising, and the prediction is sent out that it will soon become the greatest hop-producing country in the world. A Portland syndicate has purchased a large tract near Fort Wrangle, and will plant it with hops. The sun shines with almost tropical heat during the short summer, and hence the crop is sure of maturity. Land can be had for the asking, labor is cheap and the soil needs little preparation. The hops can be gathered for twenty-five cents a basket, or about half the rate paid pickers in Oregon.

SINCE the advent of "Jack the Ripper" of London, this country has developed "Jack the Kisser," "Jack the Peeper," "Jack the Snipper" and several other kinds of bad "Jacks." The latest is "Jack the Smasher," who is now troubling Chicago. He breaks into the houses and destroys costly furniture, paintings, statuary, jewelry, curtains and dresses, but does not carry off anything. Not a single article of value has been missed, though a great many have been rendered worthless. The "Jack" business has become a fad among the vicious and nothing short of a few doses of cold lead will cure it.

INTERESTING NEWS COMPILATION.

FIFTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

WEDNESDAY, April 13. — Bills were passed in the senate to reorganize the artillery and infantry of the army and to increase its efficiency; authorizing the secretary of war to cause an exploration and survey of the interior of the territory of Alaska; to amend the railroad land forfeiture acts so as to permit actual settlers to purchase the lands within three years after forfeiture; to provide for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, barley and rye; for the preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, creating a record and pension office in the war department, and for the better control of and to promote the safety of national banks. Mr. Morgan spoke in favor of the free coinage of silver. EAGER FOR HOMES.

Over 2,000 Waiting Settlers Crossed the Line Into the Sisseton Reservation at Noon Friday—A Wild Scramble for Lands.

BROWN'S VALLEY, Minn., April 16.—Under a warm and glorious sun the great Sisseton reservation was thrown open to the public at 12 o'clock Friday, and though the rush over the line was milder than most people expected, it was sufficiently exciting and picturesque to please anybody. In fact, it was wildly exciting, and one of the strongest pictures ever expressed to mortal eyes. Over 1,000 eager home-seekers were scattered and strung out for miles, the line of human beings disappearing in the distance. Many were mounted on broncos, others on livery horses, many in wagons, all anxious for the signal for the race. Many were on foot, waiting, hoping and devoured by nervousness.

Men stood with one foot almost on the line with their bodies bent forward as a sprinter awaits a signal. Twelve o'clock came. Up went Col. Barnard's right hand. The bugle pealed forth the order. Firing began instantly. The guards along the line took up the signal, the roar of the carbines sounding fainter and fainter till it died away.

A wild scene followed. The long line of human beings crossed the reservation line like a flash. It was a mad race of man against animal. Through the long line shot the Indian guides and their charges mounted on fleet-footed broncos and riding as if for their lives. They were soon mere specks on the plain. Then came others on livery horses, lashing them cruelly and speeding along like wind, though the gait could not last. Away off to the north the horses appeared as if out of the ground and for miles could be seen that wild chase over the plains, the specks finally stringing out in one long chain and soon disappearing. Down the declines, over ruts, stones and everything in their way rushed buckboards, spring and heavy wagons, in each case the driver standing up and lashing the team like one possessed. In some were seated women hanging tenaciously to the vehicle as it bounded into the air and crashed to earth again. A young woman dashed by on a bronco and by her side rode a Sioux. Where they had come from no one knew. They were late but they were going at railroad speed. Those who had hastened at the first signal were rapidly coming to a halt. Their steeds were exhausted, and those who started slowly at first now began to appear and forge ahead. At least half a dozen became utterly discouraged and turned back towards Brown's Valley. They had been deceived in the horses and many were ready to drop dead with fatigue.

Between 2,500 and 3,000 settlements will be made. An Indian courier who has just arrived states that already certain parts of the reservation show a surprising change.

It is now believed that not over 2,500 persons have located claims and that there will be good lands vacant for a week to come. Many are trusting to this, and a large crowd will leave here with guides to-day on the search. Most of the people in the great rush at noon carried compasses. Army officers assert that there were over 500 people located in the reservation in Indian huts in the brush to the west and in the ravines, where the eye of the soldier as he sped along could not reach them.

At the long bridge, 16 miles from here, and on the border line, 8 miles from Wheaton, there was a great clash. The crowds from Wheaton, those from the lake basin and the border line northeast of there, all came together in a confused mass, all striving to reach the coveted lands near the town site in township 127, range 51. There were several fierce brawls, in which many men were roughly handled, but no blood was shed. Lieut. Crabbs thinks there will be some mean fighting in the northern sections. Hundreds of men are crowding there from Brown's Valley, Wheaton, White Rock, Hankinson and other points, and, as these are the best lands, all will make a desperate effort to secure them.

Miss Stanfer, of North Dakota; Miss Dehart, Mrs. Osborne and Mrs. Burnett, of Minneapolis, and Miss Sharp, all returned Friday night, happy in the fact that they located good claims close to the town site. They sat up all night in a tent, and it was a merry party throughout. Though determined to locate they were materially assisted by the men, who had pledged their assistance and protection.

[The Sisseton Indian reservation surplus lands that were opened to settlement at noon Friday are located in the northeastern corner of South Dakota, covering most of Robert county, lapping over on the edge of Marshall and Day counties, crossing the panhandle of Grant and the sharp point of the triangular-shaped reservation extending down to the center of Coddington, a few miles from Watertown. The northern base of the triangle extends over into Sargent and Richland counties in North Dakota, and for that reason fillings may be made at Fargo. The lands are rich and numerous lakes cover the entire extent of the reservation, a good portion of which is wooded and of a hilly character. In fact the character of the lands reflects much credit on the judgment of the Sisseton Indians, who chose this land as their reward for their help to the settlers in the Indian war of 1862. For nearly thirty years they held the reservation intact but finally concluded that they would prefer to have their lands in severalty and live like whites, so the matter was soon arranged, with the aid of a commission, and Friday's scramble for lands is the result. The Indians have selected many of the best lands on the reservation, but it is estimated that enough for about 4,000 claims of 160 acres each still remained up to noon Friday.]

VIRGINIA VISITED.

PETERSBURG, Va., April 16.—The counties contiguous to Petersburg were visited Thursday night by a most terrific wind, rain and hailstorm, the severest ever experienced in this section of the state. The storm was particularly destructive in Dinwiddie county, where the wind attained the velocity of a cyclone and left death and destruction in its path. It covered an area of 15 miles, beginning in the center of the county and extending to the Sussex county line, to within a short distance of Stony Creek, a station on the Petersburg & Welden railroad 20 miles from Petersburg. Houses, barns and fences were leveled to the ground, and immense trees which had stood the storms of half a century or more were torn out by the roots, while others had their limbs twisted into all conceivable shapes.

During the storm the residence of Milton R. Rose, owner of a large sawmill, was taken by the wind from its foundation and carried into the air, and falling some yards away was crushed to pieces, the timbers falling upon Mrs. Rose and her children. Mrs. Rose was instantly killed but the children escaped uninjured. It is stated that a servant girl employed by Mrs. Rose who was in the house at the time was also killed. Mr. Rose was not at home at the time of the cyclone.

It is feared that other damage not yet reported has been done by the hurricane. The storm was also very severe in Chesterfield county, in the vicinity of the county courthouse, where there was a heavy fall of hail, which did much damage in the way of breaking window glasses, cutting vegetation to pieces and destroying fruit trees.

NORFOLK, Va., April 16.—A cyclone struck this section about 8 o'clock Thursday night and left destruction in its wake. The wind attained a velocity of 60 miles an hour, and hail as large as small nuts fell. The greatest damage was done at Lambert's Point where a new roundhouse is being erected by the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. A wall 200 feet around and from 12 to 22 feet high was blown down as if it had been paper.

In Princess Anne county, near Creed's bridge, fifteen dwellings, barns and other farming implements were totally destroyed. Fruit trees were ruined, but the early crops are uninjured. The storm originated in Texas and is sweeping across the continent.

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 16.—The town of Bennettsville was visited at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon by the most terrific hailstorm that has ever been known in this state. The cloud came from the northwest. The hailstones were 2 inches in diameter and fell to the depth of 6 inches. Birds, chickens and hogs were killed and many glasses were broken; men and horses were knocked down, vegetables and cotton were completely cut down, and incalculable injury is reported from the country.

JACKSON, Miss., April 16.—Deputy Sheriff Crocker, of Lee county, was a passenger on the first Mobile & Ohio train that crossed the Tombigbee river in eight days. At that point half a mile of track has been washed up and carried a mile, where it was lodged against trees. Capt. Crocker says the published reports do not give half an idea of the wrecks and ruin to be seen in Lowndes, Clay and Munroe counties. Houses, fences and bridges are all gone. Thousands of dead horses, mules, cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry and the body of an occasional negro can be seen in every direction. Warrior river, in Alabama, just across the line, rose 47 feet in four hours. The city of Columbia is feeding 500 refugees. The water is falling in the Yazoo and Big Black rivers, in the western portion of the state, and the danger of an immediate serious overflow is about over. Trains are running on through.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

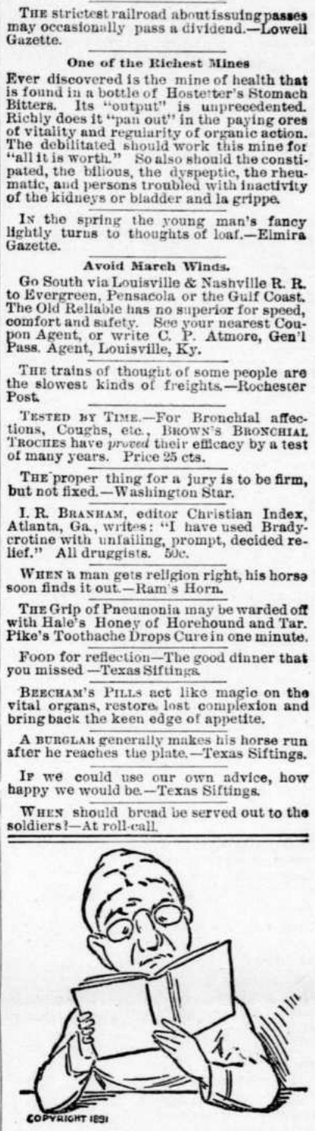
IF we could use our own advice, how happy we would be.—Texas Siftings.

WHEN should bread be served out to the soldiers?—At roll-call.



Doesn't "look" as she ought—the weak, nervous and ailing woman. As long as she suffers from the aches, pains, and derangements peculiar to her sex, she can't expect to.

But there's only herself to blame. With Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, she's a different woman. And it's a change that can be seen as well as felt. The system is invigorated, the blood enriched, digestion improved, melancholy and nervousness dispelled.

With the "Favorite Prescription," all the proper functions are restored to healthy action. Periodical pains, weak back, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, all "female complaints" are cured by it. It's the only medicine for woman's weaknesses and ailments that's guaranteed to do what is claimed for it. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it's recommended, the money is returned.

Can something else offered by the dealer, though it may pay him better, be "just as good"?

"August Flower"

"I have been afflicted with biliousness and constipation for fifteen years and first one and then another preparation was suggested to me and tried, but to no purpose. A friend recommended August Flower and words cannot describe the admiration in which I hold it. It has given me a new lease of life, which before was a burden. Its good qualities and wonderful merits should be made known to everyone suffering with dyspepsia and biliousness." JESSE BARKER, Printer, Humboldt, Kas.

A BOTHERSOME BUSINESS.

Oh! this being in love is a bothersome business;
It just keeps one in torment from morning till night.
Tho' I quarrel with Jack every minute I'm with him,
I'm wretched whenever he's out of my sight.
His name, tho' prosaic, it has but to be mentioned
And my heart gives a jump, and—I'd perish before
I would own up to him—it stands still while I listen

I can settle to nothing—to reading nor sewing—
Just for thinking of Jack. I don't flirt any more—
Not because it is wrong, but because the plain truth is
What once was a pastime is now but a bore.
For the rest of mankind, tho' they all were Apollos,
I've no eyes and no ears, for, alas and alack!
When a woman's in love the whole universe centers
In some commonplace fellow like honest old Jack.

For it's fact—and I know it—that Jack is no hero;
He's about as unlike all the knights of romance
That I've read of or dreamed of as any man going.
How 'twas that he came my girl's soul to entrance
I can't tell; I suppose, tho', that shy rascal Cupid
Just for spite pulls the wool over each woman's eyes
At least once in her life, and an ev'ryday mortal
Looks to her—for awhile—like a god in disguise.

The last man in the world to set up for an idol,
You'd say, was my Jack. How it all came about
Is a marvel to me, who at love and at lovers
Have so long found it easy to fleet and to flout.
I pretend to be cold, and I'm high and I'm mighty
With poor Jack, when at heart I'm as meek as a dove;
But oh! does it most gladden, or sadden, or madden

—Boston Globe.

Running a School.

AMONG other things I have taught school. It would be difficult in these days of advanced ideas and increased wealth to duplicate my original experience. It was in the time when the pedagogue boarded around in the "deestrict," and barring the teacher out was among the most cherished privileges of young America. I was young, rather inclined to think that life was worth living only for the fun to be extracted from it, and became a rural instructor only because parental authority thought the attendant experience would tend to cure the mischief and frivolity which seemed to predominate in my make-up. My father secured a position for me and I passed an examination that was easier than the catechism. Wise counsels were dinned into my ears, and accompanying them was an intimation that I had a pretty difficult lot of scholars to deal with. This did not bother me so much as the fact that I must be secluded from the outer world and its enchantments with which I had been so enamored.

I had sympathetic brothers, for we were a big family of boys, and, while enlivening existence with occasional quarrels, we always stood by each other as against the rest of the world. On the morning of my departure I was full of troubles and half inclined to cut loose from home restraints in the interest of the army, navy or development of mineral interests in the far west. In the first place, my clothes did not fit. This is not a resort to modern slang, but the candid statement of a solemn truth. My father's idea of developing boys was to make them thoroughly independent and unhampered by conventionalities. So I was not dressed in accordance with any suggestions of fashion, but after plans and specifications original with the head of the household. The coat I wore was first donned on the occasion of a wealthy aunt's wedding. At the time of that somewhat gorgeous event I kept in the background as much as possible, but even then I could hear occasional expressions of curiosity as to "who cut that coat?" It was too long, too big around and without any claim to popular indorsement. The rest of the outfit was in harmony with the coat.

To obviate the humiliation which I thought must attach to such a makeup I had anticipated my salary and invested in a stunning suit of fine cloth and execrutiatingly broad measure binding. This was stowed underneath a pile of books in an old satchel in which I was to carry my possessions to an untried field of labor. But when I went to hitching a horse to the buggy preparatory to making a start those fatherly ideas of sturdy independence again obtruded themselves. I must walk. The best men in the history of the country had started out with no aids save their own talents and their indomitable will. The first stages toward greatness were not to be taken with a horse and buggy.

Of course, I was bluer than a bound boy at a husking, but I read a good deal in the sly wink brother Cash gave me as I started across the orchard to shorten the six-miles trip ahead of me. A half-mile walk took me around a curve into the woods, and there I sat on an old moss-grown log, wondering with the perspicuity of youth whether I was an adopted son or a natural offspring, thus to be treated. Soon there came the sound of rapidly-approaching wheels, and around the corner whirled Cash at a terrific rate of speed, using the whip and holding the lines like a first-class jockey in a close finish.

We found the schoolhouse, dingy, somewhat out of plumb and somewhat disfigured by a coal shed in the rear that suggested the cocked hat of a gloriously drunken man, while there was a knotty conundrum in the query as to whether the shed was leaning on the schoolhouse or the schoolhouse on the shed.

Cash simply deposited the grip and myself, told me to keep a stiff upper lip, and sped for home. I found the schoolhouse unlocked, walked in, and there stood a veritable Amazon with sleeves rolled to her arm pits, skirts pinned up, her red hair disheveled and her freckled face alive with curiosity.

"Be you the new school-teacher?" she inquired, by way of salutation.

"That's the information I have from the directors and I've come down to look the thing over," was my reply.

"Better go back. You can't teach this school. We've throwed two teachers out this fall. Pshaw! No little feller like you can't boss them big boys. First thing you know they'll kick up a row, you'll get licked and school will be busted again."

"Don't you young people care to learn anything?"

"Some of us do, but them big fellers is a bad lot. Think it smart to clean out a school and have nuthin' to do."

"Well, I am glad I was so fortunate to meet a lady in the outset who was thoughtful enough to tell me all this. I am certainly under obligations to you. I wish all the scholars would show a like friendly disposition."

That brought her down with a flutter. She hastened to readjust that intensely auburn hair, the skirts were deftly relieved of pins and her face carried the tell-tale evidence of a good heart.

"You talk better than them other teachers we had. They just blowed and blustered and didn't have no spunk. Are you spunky?"

"Not in the sense of being ugly. I'm naturally of a very friendly disposition, but I rather think I will teach this school for the time agreed upon."

"That's the ticket, and I'm upon your side, too. I kin help you some," and she looked at a pair of arms that suggested terrific action in a promiscuous row. "And I'll tell you, look out for that Wermer gang. Tom Wermer and Billy Henderson, he's a boy from the Five Points that one of our neighbors is raisin', are awful. The best way would be to kill 'em the first day. They're over there at the brewery half the time and if you're askeert of them you might as well quit afore you start."

After leaving my newly-acquired ally, I went to the place I was to board and lodge for the first week. At dinner two pretty girls first attracted my attention, but soon I was in conversation with as handsome a young fellow as one often sees. He was tall, strong, wide-awake, had coal-black, curly hair, eyes to match, clean-cut features and a fearless look. He had been Gen. Kilpatrick's private orderly in the army, and as a mere boy had won credit and favorable notice for some daring volunteer work in the carrying of important messages. Vant Blackburn was his name, and in a two or three hours' stroll we became well acquainted. He was studying at home, intended to fit himself for a profession and had little in common with the young men in the neighborhood. I was farther advanced than he and finally induced him to become one of my scholars. I concede some selfishness on my part in this arrangement, for I was convinced that the red-haired girl and myself could not control the scholars in the event of trouble.

School opened the next day, and I never looked over a more motley assemblage. The first day passed off fairly well, as I was trying to condense that houseful of irreconcilables into such a number of classes as would permit my giving all at least a chance a day. Once while I was at the blackboard a small lump of coal whizzed past my head and struck the wall. I turned quickly, but everyone was intently studying and the matter passed without comment.

"It's coming," said Vant that night, "and my advice is to nip the thing in the bud. Of course you must take the initiative. Have you the kidney to tackle one of the gang?"

"Wait and see," was my response, and I dreamed of nothing but Donnybrook fair scenes that night.

Next day I was hearing a class of beginners in algebra, for there were some bright minds in that singular aggregation. Another lump of coal struck the wall as I was using an old-fashioned hickory pointer as an aid in explanation. I did not turn my head, but a minute later whirled around just in time to see Henderson, the Five Pointer, with his arm drawn back to throw. I was beside him in a few quick jumps and laying on the stripes without special regard to where they fell. Henderson sprang for the heavy poker that lay near, but I reversed the pointer, swung with the heavy end and knocked him senseless. On came Wermer but Vant met him and in a few seconds the trim private orderly was giving the big bully and leader of the gang more punishment than he ever had before. He yelled for his allies and it was growing painfully warm when I heard a whoop, saw a red streak and some besom of destruction was cracking heads right and left. It was my freckled-faced girl making good her pledge of loyalty. She was simply irresistible. It was no broom that she wielded, but one of those old-time floor mops, saturated with water and weighing twenty-four ounces to the pound. We routed the enemy with an awful rout. Those who could not run out we dragged out. The door was locked, the debris removed and we went right along keeping school.

IT WAS MY FRECKLED-FACED GIRL.

The directors were so delighted that they raised my wages, and no higher tribute could come from those tight-fisted tillers of the soil. Henderson came back, made an awkward apology, Wermer followed his example, and no better behaved boys could be desired.

But how strange the mutations of time. Wermer is a wealthy man and influential politician. Henderson runs a saloon and has long been trying to drink up all of his own stock. Vant Blackburn is a poor, discouraged farmer. The fiery-haired wielder of the mop is the wife of a wealthy banker, and I—have finished my story.—Detroit Free Press.

"Mr. Thackeray," he asked, "what do they think of Tupper?" "They don't think of Tupper," was the reply.

—Mrs. Lew Wallace says that Florence Nightingale was a slender woman of graceful figure and great dignity of manner. She exhibited remarkable fortitude at all times, and especially when present at surgical operations. Once when the agonies of a patient in the hands of the surgeons put to flight his attendants Miss Nightingale turned and rebuked them, saying: "Come back! Shame on you as Christians! Shame on you as women."

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—A teaspoonful of whole black mustard seed will stop vomiting. In severe cases a tablespoonful may be given.

—Boiled Mackeral: Boil until the skin slips off easily. Remove the bones, and serve with drawn butter.—Housekeeper.

—To tighten cane-seat chairs turn up the chair-bottom and wash the cane-work thoroughly with soapy water and a soft cloth. Let it dry in the air, and it will be firm as when new, provided the cane has not been broken.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Make an ordinary layer cake and for the filling take three bananas chopped and add pulverized sugar to taste; put into the cake between the layers. It makes a very nice cake for a change, although it will not keep nicely more than two days.

—Dressing for Baked Fish: From three to five crackers rolled fine, one small cupful of chopped salt pork, one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of pepper; sage and summer savory to taste. One finely chopped onion for those who like the flavor. — Housekeeper.

—Vinegar Sauce: For a pint of sauce, mix together two cupfuls of flour and about half a nutmeg, grated. Pour on this a generous pint of boiling water, stirring all the while. Add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and a level teaspoonful of salt, and simmer for twenty minutes.—Good Housekeeping.

—Raised Doughnuts: Three eggs, one cup of sugar, one-third cup of butter, three pints of bread sponge. Mix with the hand as soft as possible; let it rise. Mold again; have the breadboard floured, put the dough on it, roll out half an inch thick and cut out. Let them raise half an hour. Fry in moderately hot lard.—Boston Budget.

—A sheet of glass—a window-pane for example—can be cut as easily as a sheet of card-board. The secret consists in keeping the glass, the shears and the hands under water during the operation. The glass can be cut in straight or curved lines without a break or a crack. This is because the water deadens the vibrations of the shears and the glass. If the least part of the shears comes of the water, the vibration will be sufficient to mar the success of the experiment.

—A Beef Relish: Chop a pound of round steak very fine, mix with it three Boston crackers first rolled and sifted, a well-beaten egg, one and a half teaspoonfuls salt, one-third of a teaspoonful pepper, a pinch of sweet marjorum and a tablespoonful of good catsup. When well mixed, form into a little loaf with the hands, lay it in a buttered dish, and rub a little melted butter over the top; pour on a teacupful of canned tomato-juice and set in the oven to bake forty minutes. Baste a few times with the tomato-juice before taking up. Serve cold, cut into moderately thin slices.—Orange Judd Farmer.

HATS AND BONNETS.

Some of the Spring Styles are Unique and Beautiful.

The shop windows are gay with spring hats and bonnets, festoons of bright satin and moire ribbons, and garlands of flowers, rivaling in delicacy and exquisiteness of coloring the fragrant models from which they are copied. Straws are even more lacy and transparent than those of last year, crowns are absurdly small, and ribbons with flowers the favorite decoration. A peculiarly vivid yet soft shade of green stands out strongly among the fashionable tints. The pancake style still prevails, and is tilted and twisted in a great variety of becoming shapes. Among the new hats is one of ecru open straw with a sail of lace in front and a mast of ribbon at the back. The strings are of ecru satin ribbon and fastened high up on the hair beneath a rosette. Another very spring-like hat of black lace straw was lined with pink chiffon and trimmed with green ribbon and pink azaleas.

A dove-like little bonnet is of gray fancy straw, scalloped with silver cord and trimmed with gray velvet ribbon and strings and a silver and pink osprey. A picturesque hat of fine light straw has its crown veiled in green Bengaline silk and encircled with a torsade in gay striped ribbon, caught up at the side with an old paste buckle and with ends of embroidered lisse round a cluster of yellow ostrich tips.—N. Y. Sun.

New Corselets and Sashes.

Moire antique in large waves and plaid silks are the novelties used for corselets of woolen dresses for spring. They are cut in various fashions, some of the prettiest being in two points high in the back, then tapered on the sides, almost to a point in the front, to meet under a small chou of the moire. Another of gay plaid silk on a dark wool dress is even all around, beginning two or three inches below the armholes and reaching to the edge of the corsage, which curves slightly below the belt line. It is fitted by a seam down the middle of the back, and also down the front, and is hooked on the left side. Whalebones are in the seams of this corselet and on each side. A bow of two great loops of silk tightly strapped is in the back, and sash ends, each twelve inches wide, fall thence nearly to the end of the skirt. Satin ribbon, four to six inches wide, is set on the top of skirts, to serve as a soft belt when the skirt is put on, above the edge of the corsage, and is fastened with a chou in the back. Narrower moire or satin ribbon is set plainly on the edge of pointed waists, and falls in long ends at the back. The short directoire sash is quite wide, and merely crossing the front of the corsage, is tied in a large bow with short ends on the left side.—Harper's Bazar.

A Remedy for the Grip.

Drink freely of boneset tea. Boneset, more commonly called thoroughwort, can be purchased at any drug-store for five cents an ounce. The leaves are the part used. Break up an ounce of the leaves in a teapot, or any vessel with a cover, pour on a quart of boiling hot water, stir and cover up. In half an hour it is ready to use. Dose, half a cupful every three or four hours. Drink it hot at first. When the cold and fever is broken up use it cold for a tonic. This simple remedy goes to the right spot, curing when the most powerful and dangerous medicines have failed. I was myself all broken down with the grip and thought I should be lucky if I got all over it in three months. I went to drinking boneset tea and in forty-eight hours was completely cured and feeling the best for years. Many in Lewiston and Auburn have tried it with the most gratifying results.—Portland Argus.

HARD TO DECIDE.

He Wasn't Sure But Marriage Was a Failure.

A clergyman was telling anecdotes of incidents in his early life as a pastor. One of them was about a marriage ceremony which he once performed. A young man of the country districts came to the pastor one day.

"I want to get married," he said; "and I guess I've got about as good a woman as there is around this part of the state. Can you marry us?"

The clergyman thought that he could, and so the young man went away and soon returned with his bride. They both took the affair very coolly, and when the ceremony was over the bridegroom took the clergyman aside.

"I don't want to drive any bargain at a time like this," he said; "but of course I ain't sure this marriage business is going to prove all that I expect of it. How would half cash now, one-fourth in one month and the rest in two months, after I have had a fair chance to see if I got a good bargain, suit you?"

"Well," said the pastor, "if that seems fair to you, I am willing. You seem to be a prosperous young man. We'll say ten dollars now, five dollars in one month and five dollars in two months."

"That's a go," answered the happy bridegroom, and he handed over ten dollars.

At the end of a month he returned with five dollars more.

"I ain't sure," he said a little doubtfully, "about it yet, but I'm willing to give you the benefit of the doubt and to make the second payment. You see," he added, "while I have my own doubt about the blessings of married life, I don't know as it's going to make much difference. I ain't just so sure as I was that I could get out of this thing now if I wanted to. She's got an opinion of her own," he said with a faint grin; "and if she says we have got to keep on being married, I guess it'll have to go at that."

"You arn't thinking of getting a divorce, are you?" asked the clergyman.

"Oh, no; at least not just yet."

"Of what faults in your wife do you complain?"

"Oh, nothing in particular."

"Why are you dissatisfied, then?"

"I ain't just dissatisfied. I say I haven't made up my mind yet."

"Why shouldn't you know one way or the other?"

"Well, to tell you the honest truth, I don't believe it would do any good. I'm afraid whatever she decides will settle it." Then he went off, looking rather puzzled over the problem.

At the end of the second month there came a knock at the door, and the pastor himself answered it. The bride was standing there, and about five feet behind her was the doubting husband.

"My husband owes you five dollars, doesn't he?" she asked sharply.

"Well, answered the pastor, with a smile, "I am not sure about that point."

"Yes, he does," she said firmly. "He owes you five dollars. Henry, wasn't your bargain that five dollars should be paid at the end of the second month if the marriage was satisfactory?"

"Yes," said the husband weakly.

"And it's satisfactory, ain't it?"

Henry looked at the pastor.

"It's satisfactory, ain't it?" she repeated.

"Y-e-s," said the husband, looking down at his boots.

"I thought so," cried the wife, triumphantly. "Now pay him that $5."

The husband handed a bill to the clergyman, and said to him in a low voice:

"I ain't quite sure yet, one way or the other; but she's got me, and I guess she means to hang on to me. So I'll just have to worry along till she dies or I get a chance to run away!"—N. Y. Tribune.

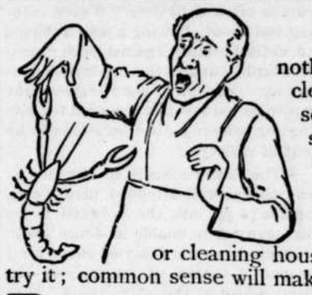
It Hurts



nothing that can be washed or cleaned—Pearline. The purest soap is no safer—the poorest soap is no cheaper. It is more effective than the strongest—it is more convenient than the best. Pearline saves labor and wear in washing clothes or cleaning house. A few cents will let you try it; common sense will make you use it.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 283 JAMES PYLE, New York

These lands are in a well settled prosperous region near the railroad and convenient to churches, schools and markets, and must be sold within a short time. Especially adapted for colonies. DELANO DIARY.

—Rev. H. A. Noyes will preach on Sabbath at 3 P. M. at the Presbyterian church.

--The Delano Furniture Company are getting a rustle on them. Call and see them.

—Dr. C. B. Ames, of Rockford, has been spending the past couple of weeks at Minneapolis.

—J. D. Brandon has moved to Howard where he expects to continue in the produce business.

The I. O. O. F. have mended their ways and now have a substantial walk to their Lodge Room.

--Read the official notices to sidewalk builders and of the Board of Health in another column.

—Butcher Cramer sports one of the prettiest driving teams in town, and still has not secured a bride.

—John Sturman is taking a lay off for ten days and intends commencing the building of a new house on his lots.

—The M. E. church property, thanks to the enterprising pastor, mostly, has now the bran newest sidewalk in town.

—Cargill Elevator Company is a new sign lately painted on the place of business of that firm at Third street crossing.

—Don't forget to attend the meeting of teachers tomorrow, Saturday in Delano. The program indicates an interesting time.

—The usual number of beaux from the neighboring country and villages were in town Sunday to see the belles of Delano.

—J. W. Parsons moved this week into the Grafft residence on Third Street where he is more conveniently located for his business.

—The Watertown Roller Mills shipped a car load of their excellent flour over the G. N. from this point to St. Paul on Tuesday.

—Messrs. K. Topel and E. Brandenburg, of Germany, arrived on Tuesday to take up their residence in the country near Shrader's place.

—Mike O'Hair thought he was owner of a pretty fair road team but now is of the opinion that the preacher and his pony take the Ginger cake.

—Wood was scarce this week and those who failed to provide for seeding time were obliged to pick up chips until the independent granger saw fit to haul in a load.

—John Brandser, Waverly's tailor, dropped his stitching long enough to come to Delano and assist in furnishing music for the firemen's ball on Tuesday night.

—From the number of empty beer barrels piled up in front of Berneck's on Tuesday morning one would judge that somebody had deposited a good many dimes for drinks.

—Several of our sporting characters have had their horses clipped so as to keep up with the city fashions. The poor animals these cold days look much as if they needed their old coats.

—The Firemen's Ball on Tuesday evening passed off quietly. Several yarties from a distance enjoyed the occasion. Dell Young is said to have brought his girl over from the county seat.

—Five of the Enwiller boys have gone to the Sisseton Reservation to locate lands. If they take claims together they will probably start a town. When visiting that section look out for Enwillerville.

—W. M. Mowatt has at last found heart to have those lombardy popples extracted, root and branch, from his front yard, and now has a row of nice boxelders, which materially improves his nice residence property on Third street.

--Mr. Weisner's team took a lively runaway on Thursday afternoon. They started from Wiese's saloon and ran up R. R. Avenue to Third street when they crossed the track and went out of town on the keen jump with the driver following on foot several blocks behind yelling whoa! whoa! at the top of his voice.

—The roads have been so rough until recently when farmers have been so busy as not to be able to haul manure with which several of the alleys have become well filled. The Board of Health has ordered the removal of the same within 15 days, when those in want of manure will find none in town to be had.

—The Eagle claims to have a promise from Billings to furnish her with a minority report of the Board of Health meetings. If the liberal amount of advertising bestowed upon him by that bird this week is a sample we would advise her to get her pay in advance. The Board never authorized the publication of its minutes to be paid for from the village treasury and the old bird has been "gulled" to the amount of at least that much.

—L. P. Probst is treating his premises to a new coat of paint.

—Mayor Coolen is remodeling the old skating rink and making about half a dozen stores, under one roof, which he proposes to number. The Mayor is a rustler and means business. If the Democrats don't agree on a New York man we presume John would not refuse an offer of first place, especially after he gets that stove-pipe hat.

--The Eagle says if it were not for the "silly" BUFFALO GAZETTE, Wm. Ziebarth would not show his donkey ears as often as he does. We see nothing bad about allowing a man a chance to defend himself against such "monster birds", and as the Eagle has "donkey ears" enough of her own, we ought not to be too severely censured for giving our readers a slice occasionally by way of variety.

—The Easter concert at the M. E. church was well attended, many being unable to get into the crowded house and many more unable to secure seats. The exercises were carried out in good shape. A quartet of horns from the band added to the attractions. Miss Mable Parsons recitation was something out of the regular line and was well received. The singing by the children and choir was good. Rev Davies' remarks were appropriate. The collection for missions was $4.18.

—Mr. T. J. McDermott, one of the gentlemanly mail carriers passing through this place over the G. N., was lately admitted to the bar in St. Paul, where he read law in the office of C. H. Benedict & Co. This speaks well for his energy and industry, having distinguished himself as an earnest student of Blackstone while serving Uncle Sam in the capacity of one of his very best mail carriers. Mr. McDermott hails from LeSueur county where he spent his boyhood days, and where the writer was acquainted with the family. He expects to hang his shingle to the breeze in the near future. We predict success for him whereever he may locate.

—On Monday evening the village council held an uncommonly lengthly session. All present except councilman Brandon. Several sidewalks were ordered reconstruceed and some new ones built, see notice in another column. Bills were allowed,

John Steffes, cleaning streets	$4.50
H. V. Wilder, street com.	10.02
C. Belt, cleaning streets	6.45
G. Anderson, work on drain	.75
Mrs. F. Roehl, for care of Mrs. Conroy	18.00

Olat Wicklund was voted $5. per month in groceries and provisions on poor account. Marshal instructed to stop ball playing on the streets. Several new street lamps were ordered. The street committee were instructed to report on Street to Freeman's at next meeting. Valentine Eppel was appointed assessor, salary $2. per day. The question of purchasing a park was referred to Mayor Coolen. T. K. Danforth was appointed a member of the Board of Health for three years. Recorder was instructed to ascertain the price of a night watch register and report. Moved that bids be invited from the Eagle and the GAZETTE for the village printing by the next meeting.

County Cullings.

The name of H. C. Bull for State Treasurer has been brought out by some of the city dailies. Wright county is entitled to some recognition at the hands of the Democracy of the State and Mr. Bull would make a capable and efficient Treasurer.

Strange things happen. This week we have the Buffalo Journal giving a minister pointers on temperance! The Eagle trying to instruct a German in the use of his own language! And the Waverly Tribune gratuitously and unasked trying to tell a Democratic editor how to run his paper!

This issue is the close of the first year's work of the Times and we are pleased to say we have something to commence next year with.--The Sherburne County Times.

Mr. Dewing is quite a spicy editor.

So far as the county of Wright is concerned it is our opinion that a fusion of the Democratic with any other party would be detrimental to the Democrats. The proper thing to do is to hoist their standard up and ask all opposed to protective tariff to rally around it with the best and truest Democrats they can find for standard bearers and march on to victory.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1892.

Mr. Harrison is confronted by a very peculiar situation. He must choose between violating a pledge made to one of his few personal friends, and keeping that pledge and jeopardizing his chance of being renominated by antagonizing the most powerful Senators in his party. He has this week intimated to Senator Quay, who claims the right to name the successor to the late Justice Bradley, of the U. S. Supreme Court, as the price of his support, that he intended to keep the pledge made to Attorney General Miller when he was taken into the Cabinet, and nominate him to the vacancy. Mr Quay told him, it is said, that he could control enough votes in the Senate to defeat the nomination, and more, that if it was made he would use all his influence to have the Minneapolis convention nominate an anti-Harrison man.

This is not the first time that Mr. Harrison has intimated his intention to redeem that promise made to his old law partner; but in the cases of the other vacancies on the Supreme Court he was squarely bulldozed out of his intentions by Senators and other prominent men in his party, and he may be again, but those near to him say that he fears to allow this opportunity to go by of providing for his friend for life, as it is hardly probable that there will be another vacancy during his term of office, and he fears that he cannot be re-elected, even if he is renominated. Still, he will probably think some time before he deliberately invites a fight with the Senators who could be controlled by Quay, as he knows very well that many of them only wish an excuse to fight him, anyway.

It has often been stated that anything was possible in Washington, provided enough money was put up; and the purchase of a site for the new Washington Post Office, by authority of the billion dollar Congress, in the disreputable locality on the South side of Pennsylvania Avenue, where the ground is only about two feet above ordinary high tide in the Potomac, and where the engineers are now driving forty-foot piles in search of a foundation firm enough to build upon, certainly furnishing a convincing argument that the statement is in close proximity to the truth, and the high price paid for the ground makes it certain that the money spent by the real estate lobby in manipulating the deal, all came back with several hundred per cent increase.

The same gang is laying the wires to unload another section of this swamp land, which it neither owns or holds options on, at a nominal price, on the Government as a site for a new Patent Office, at a price that would purchase a site in a good location, Already a bill has been introduced appropriating $3,500,000 for a new Patent Office, and specifically providing that it shall be located on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue, and the two daily papers, both of which own Avenue property, will help the lobby to get it through, and some of the Senators and Members who pushed the Post Office bill through will also help. Democratic Senators and Members should refuse to aid these speculators, and they doubtless will, when the real status of the matter is brought to their attention,—they have been mislead by Washington newspapers.

Chairman O'Ferrall, of the House Election Committee, has given notice that he will call up the report of Noyes vs. Rockwell, next Tuesday. This is the case in which Senator Hill's name has been very much mixed up, because of his belief that the committee did wrong in reporting in favor of Noyes, the Republican contestant. It is expected that a lively debate will take place when the report is taken up, and it will not surprise many if the House votes against the report of the committee and retains Rockwell in his seat.

The House Census Committee has reported favorably the resolution instructing that committee to inquire into the expediency of establishing a permanent Census Bureau.

The House has been working industriously on appropriation bills this week. The Democrats are determined to push the work of the House, so that the responsibility of prolonging the session beyond the middle of June or the first of July will have to be assumed by the Republican Senate.

The Senate Committee of Foreign Relations has turned down the Chinese exclusion bill, passed by the House, by reporting the Senate bill extending the present anti-Chinese law for a period of ten years as a substitute therefor.

The statement is made, but it lacks official confirmation, that the State department has reached an agreement with the Italian authorities on the question of indemnity to the families of the Italians lynched at New Orleans and that 105,000 francs is the sum which Mr. Blaine has promised, subject to the approval of Congress, to pay.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

FOR THE

BUFFALO GAZETTE

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

The Buffalo Gazette runs up the picture of Hon. Thomas Wilson at the head of its editorial columns and nominates him for governor.—St. Paul Globe.

THE Litchfield News-Ledger says "It is safe to gamble all the wet hardware you have a mind to that the Hon. Thomas Wilson, of Winona, will be the next democratic nominee for governor."

THE Midway News claims that because Thomas Wilson did not receive more votes than Dr. Amas or Eugene Wilson the people did not want him. The same thing might be said about the Republican candidate, because he received less than the combined votes of all other parties we might say that this was pretty strong proof that a Republican Governor was not the choice of the people.

IGNATIUS DONNELY is on record as bein "forninst" a Democratic and Alliance fusion for this campaign.

CANDIDATES for Governor so far are Thomas Wilson, of Winona: P. B. Winston, of Minneapolis: Gideon Ives, of St. Peter; A. R. McGill, of St. Anthony Park; Joel P. Heatwole, of Northfield and Ignatius Donnelv, of Ninneger.

THE Alliance State Central Committee met at the Merchants' Hotel, St. Paul, on Tuesday and issued an address to the independent voters of the State. It seems they have their hands full to keep together the People's party and the Alliance party to say nothing about fusion with either of the other three parties in the field.

Monticello Bridge.

Heretofore we have said little about the proposed bridge across the Mississippi River at Monticello, and nothing to discourage its being built, but on attending the meeting of the county commissioners, at Buffalo on Monday afternoon we became convinced that the law was being trampled upon by those who should know better, in their over zealous efforts to secure from the county treasury the sum of $10,000 for aid in its construction.

A large delegation of Monticello citizens with Attorney Tarbox as spokesman made application to the board for the appointing of a committee to locate a piece of road from the old county road to the river at the place where they desired to have the bridge built. This motion County Attorney Cutting informed the board, in his opinion, they had no right to grant and any expense gone to in this way would not be a county charge, as the road in question was to be laid through Monticello, an incorporated village, and that they had been previously informed that the allowing of $10,000. was illegal and void as according to the law they could allow but $6,000. and that the board must go according to law in the case. Attorney Tarbox waxed eloquent and referring to Mr. A. Y. Bayne, bridge contractor, who Attorney Cutting had said was willing to contract for $2,000. less than the bid which they proposed to accept, and who was present in the room he proceeded to blacken him, if people took any stock in what he was saying about as badly as if he had spilled the whole box of tar on to him. A. C. Riggs, who with several others were opposed to the site of the bridge took the floor and proceeded to show up some discrepencies in the attorney's arguments, complaining that he had tried to make it appear that there was four blocks difference in sites when as a matter of fact there was but two blocks. This the attorney paried by saying that it was two up and two back making four. Soon the attorney undertook to tell what Mr. Riggs had said and Riggs who proved to be about as fluent a speaker as his opponent told him it was a lie, when both parties advanced and actually assumed the positions of John L. Sullivan as nearly as they could and a genuine forcible conclusion was imminent when the bystanders separated the two Goliahs and the chairman of the County Commissioners arose and informed the delegations that the hearing of the Monticello bridge matter would be deferred until tomorrow.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1892.

Mr. Harrison appears to have been brought to a realizing sense of his situation by the speech of Senator Teller, of Colorado, charging him with using his official influence to control the votes of the Representatives and Senators on the silver question, and with being allied with the money bags of Wall street against the interests of the people, for since that speech was delivered he has stated positively that unless something should occur to bring about a change in his mind he would shortly take occasion to state formally that he would not be a candidate for a second term.

This decision was not, however, altogether due to Mr. Teller's speech. The fact that he cannot possibly be elected if he is nominated has been thrust upon Mr. Harrison from all quarters recently, and he has at last realized that it is true. Platt and Warner Miller both agree that he cannot carry New York; Quay and Cameron admit that his nomination would make Pennsylvania doubtful; Indiana Republicans say he would have no chance of carrying his own State; men who know have told him that it was doubtful whether he could carry a single one of the Pacific States, and all Republicans expect to lose several of the northwestern States. Is it any wonder that with this outlook he became discouraged and concluded to withdraw while he could do so with dignity?

The administration having made a fizzle of its attempt to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with Mexico, the House committee on Foreign affairs, believing that "geographical location, similarity of institutions, and community of commercial interests would seem to justify every reasonable effort to promote close trade relations", has reported favorably a resolution providing for an international commission, three members to be appointed by each government, to negotiate a reciprocity treaty.

The House committee on Reform in the Civil Service has already begun work on the investigation of the charges of violations of the law by Federal officials in Baltimore, made by Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt authorized by the resolution adopted by the House this week. It will study the reports made by Post Office inspectors (if Mr. Harrison will give it up) which contradicts that made by Roosevelt and published last year.

Roosevelt is understood to be preparing another report that will be sensational in its charges of violations of the law by Federal officials in Chicago, inasmuch as it will attack the Republican National committee for having sent an ex-Congressman to Chicago to collect campaign funds from officeholders.

The question of whether the votes of those Senators who supported Mr. Kyle's amendment striking the words "in gold coin of the United States" out of the bill to amend the Arizona funding act of 1890, and inserting in lieu of them the words "in lawful money of the United States", commits them to the free coinage of silver, is an interesting one, and it is being much discussed here. If it does, Senator Hill is a free coinage man, as he voted for the amendment, which was adopted by a vote of 28 to 24. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, said while the amendment was being discussed in the Senate, "The silver question is not going to down at any man's bidding or at any party's bidding. There is a majority in both Houses of Congress for the free coinage of silver if no alien or subtle influences are exercised on members." Some take the ground that this vote has no bearing whatever on the silver question, but only indicates that the 28 Senators who voted for the amendment are opposed to the enactment of any law recognizing only a single standard of value.

Representative Springer's bill for an international monetary conference, which is considered to be a very important measure, has been referred by the committee on Foreign Affairs to a subcommittee consisting of Representatives Rayner, of Maryland; Hooker, of Mississippi; and Harner, of Pennsylvania.

Deficiencies in appropriations made by the billion dollar congress are still being reported to the House. A letter was received from the Department of Justice this week, asking that $1,629,563. be appropriated on that account for it.

No Democrat having the wellfare of his party at heart could look with any other feeling than regret upon the squabble of the Democratic members of the House, this week, over the report of the election committee in the contested election case of Noyes against Rockwell

Virginia has a big delegation here working for the appropriation for the international Naval Review next year.

An investigation has been made by an official of the department of Justice of the charges made by Assistant Secretary Nettleton against Superintendent Owen, but Secretary Foster is out of town and it is not known whether it is the usual white wash or not.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

GREENWOOD.

To the old settlers of the region about the forks of Crow river, the July 4, 1856 celebration at the village of Greenwood is a memorable event. In preparing for that occasion no pains were spared on the part of the inhabitants of the village and vicinity, to make it a success, amongst whom may be named Albert Tabey, J. D. Young and A. C. Sexton, in the jovial spirits of about one and twenty, and to make the occasion—perhaps the first of the kind to take place in the Crow River Valley—a success was the desire of all. It was soon decided that A. G. Sexton should be Marshal but who should conduct the religious ceremonies of the occasion was rather a perplexing question. They were not all at that time of a religious turn of mind; finally a happy suggestion came from Albert Tabey, that Capt. John B. Edgar, of the vicinity would be a suitable person to carry out that part of the program, and after a consultation with that gentleman the matter was arranged accordingly. Capt. Edgar being at this time a strict church member, was not of the pharisaical kind, declining rather to the opposite being naturally, not only of a genial but jovial disposition, retaining many of the characteristics of his former life, that of a sea captain and being endowed with a fluency of speech and a fine address, was well suited for the occasion; and the Marshal, although eccentric in some respects, was a man of considerable executive ability and well suited for the occasion.

The morning of the 80th anniversary of the birth of our nation found a patriotic and enthusiastic assembly at the village of Greenwood, which by the efficiency of the Marshal was soon put in order and the carrying out of the program was inaugurated, all participating with zeal, and amongst other things was the drafting of Albert Tabey, the matter of the enlistment respectively that of a ludicrous kind was not overlooked, which caused some of the proceedings to be carried out in a somewhat peculiar manner. The memorable declaration was read by Albert G. Sexton. The usual patriotic remarks by the enthusiastic pioneers were not wanting, and as the forenoon proceeded, the time came around for prayer and Capt. Edgar was on hand according to program to carry out that part of the ceremonies of the day. He was conducted to the stand by Marshal Sexton, both having become in the meantime inspired by the occurrences of the day, marched enthusiastically to the rostrum and on obeying the Captain before the audience the Marshal gave him a friendly push at the same time remarking, "Now Captain, do your G— ——"; the captain however not abashed at this rally, made not only an appropriate but a very eloquent prayer, which was appreciated by all, including even the Marshal himself. The occasion was a success, not only in the matter of commemoration, but in enjoyment and recreation and cementing of friendships, and it is one bright spot in the memory of the old settler.

The hail storm will come and the safe and wise thing to do is to insure in the old reliable Farmers Co-operative Hail and Cyclone Association, of Montevideo Chippewa County, Minn., a home company which has outstripped all competitors by writing by far the most risks at the least expense, by covering the most territory thereby giving the best protection at the least possible cost, enabling them to pay from 25 to 50 per cent more each year to their unfortunate members who are unusually well pleased with the hoped settlement and prompt payment as proven by the many extensive testimonials received. CORRESPONDENCE

COUNTY SEAT NEWS.

On Monday while in Buffalo we learned among other things that Dr. Boxall, who is attending to Dr. Barton's practice while he is taking a special course in Philadelphia, is well liked and working hard, but we would advise Dr. Barton to be looking up another substitute as this one cannot last very long at the present rate having already lost six pounds of valuable adipose tissue.

Jacob Ruff has moved his butcher business into Stokes' old stand on Ackly street while Stokes takes his old stand and will run a wholesale business.

Austin Knight was looking up some good teams to place in his livery which he expects to run after a couple of months.

Dr. R. O. Cady, Wright county's vete an M. D. is still in active practice and keeps his drug store.

The county officials seemed to be discharging their duties as faithfully and conscientiously as if they were not mostly all Democrats.

The greatest disturbance we noticed was in the county commissioner's room and was caused by the Monticello delegations who were there concerning a bridge at that place.

Several of the citizens were pleased to note that no saloons were running in our village and claimed that to be best for the place.

Ex county commissioner Kingsley was a Buffalo visitor on Monday.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

The Buffalo Gazette runs up the picture of Hon. Thomas Wilson at the head of its editorial columns and nominates him for governor.—St. Paul Globe.

THE Litchfield News-Ledger says "It is safe to gamble all the wet hardware you have a mind to that the Hon. Thomas Wilson, of Winona, will be the next democratic nominee for governor."

THE Midway News claims that because Thomas Wilson did not receive more votes than Dr. Amas or Eugene Wilson the people did not want him. The same thing might be said about the Republican candidate, because he received less than the combined votes of all other parties we might say that this was pretty strong proof that a Republican Governor was not the choice of the people.

IGNATIUS DONNELY is on record as bein "forninst" a Democratic and Alliance fusion for this campaign.

CANDIDATES for Governor so far are Thomas Wilson, of Winona: P. B. Winston, of Minneapolis: Gideon Ives, of St. Peter; A. R. McGill, of St. Anthony Park: Joel P. Heatwole, of Northfield and Ignatius Donnelv, of Ninneger.

THE Alliance State Central Committee met at the Merchants' Hotel, St. Paul, on Tuesday and issued an address to the independent voters of the State. It seems they have their hands full to keep together the People's party and the Alliance party to say nothing about fusion with either of the other three parties in the field.

Monticello Bridge.

Heretofore we have said little about the proposed bridge across the Mississippi River at Monticello, and nothing to discourage its being built, but on attending the meeting of the county commissioners, at Buffalo on Monday afternoon we became convinced that the law was being trampled upon by those who should know better, in their over zealous efforts to secure from the county treasury the sum of $10,000 for aid in its construction.

A large delegation of Monticello citizens with Attorney Tarbox as spokesman made application to the board for the appointing of a committee to locate a piece of road from the old county road to the river at the place where they desired to have the bridge built. This motion County Attorney Cutting informed the board, in his opinion, they had no right to grant and any expense gone to in this way would not be a county charge, as the road in question was to be laid through Monticello, an incorporated village, and that they had been previously informed that the allowing of $10,000. was illegal and void as according to the law they could allow but $6,000. and that the board must go according to law in the case. Attorney Tarbox waxed eloquent and referring to Mr. A. Y. Bayne, bridge contractor, who Attorney Cutting had said was willing to contract for $2,000. less than the bid which they proposed to accept, and who was present in the room he proceeded to blacken him, if people took any stock in what he was saying about as badly as if he had spilled the whole box of tar on to him. A. C. Riggs, who with several others were opposed to the site of the bridge took the floor and proceeded to show up some discrepencies in the attorney's arguments, complaining that he had tried to make it appear that there was four blocks difference in sites when as a matter of fact there was but two blocks. This the attorney paried by saying that it was two up and two back making four. Soon the attorney undertook to tell what Mr. Riggs had said and Riggs who proved to be about as fluent a speaker as his opponent told him it was a lie, when both parties advanced and actually assumed the positions of John L. Sullivan as nearly as they could and a genuine forcible conclusion was imminent when the bystanders separated the two Goliahs and the chairman of the County Commissioners arose and informed the delegations that the hearing of the Monticello bridge matter would be deferred until tomorrow.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1892.

Mr. Harrison appears to have been brought to a realizing sense of his situation by the speech of Senator Teller, of Colorado, charging him with using his official influence to control the votes of the Representatives and Senators on the silver question, and with being allied with the money bags of Wall street against the interests of the people, for since that speech was delivered he has stated positively that unless something should occur to bring about a change in his mind he would shortly take occasion to state formally that he would not be a candidate for a second term.

This decision was not, however, altogether due to Mr. Teller's speech. The fact that he cannot possibly be elected if he is nominated has been thrust upon Mr. Harrison from all quarters recently, and he has at last realized that it is true. Platt and Warner Miller both agree that he cannot carry New York; Quay and Cameron admit that his nomination would make Pennsylvania doubtful; Indiana Republicans say he would have no chance of carrying his own State; men who know have told him that it was doubtful whether he could carry a single one of the Pacific States, and all Republicans expect to lose several of the northwestern States. Is it any wonder that with this outlook he became discouraged and concluded to withdraw while he could do so with dignity?

The administration having made a fizzle of its attempt to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with Mexico, the House committee on Foreign affairs, believing that "geographical location, similarity of institutions, and community of commercial interests would seem to justify every reasonable effort to promote close trade relations", has reported favorably a resolution providing for an international commission, three members to be appointed by each government, to negotiate a reciprocity treaty.

The House committee on Reform in the Civil Service has already begun work on the investigation of the charges of violations of the law by Federal officials in Baltimore, made by Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt authorized by the resolution adopted by the House this week. It will study the reports made by Post Office inspectors (if Mr. Harrison will give it up) which contradicts that made by Roosevelt and published last year.

Roosevelt is understood to be preparing another report that will be sensational in its charges of violations of the law by Federal officials in Chicago, inasmuch as it will attack the Republican National committee for having sent an ex-Congressman to Chicago to collect campaign funds from officeholders.

The question of whether the votes of those Senators who supported Mr. Kyle's amendment striking the words "in gold coin of the United States" out of the bill to amend the Arizona funding act of 1890, and inserting in lieu of them the words "in lawful money of the United States", commits them to the free coinage of silver, is an interesting one, and it is being much discussed here. If it does, Senator Hill is a free coinage man, as he voted for the amendment, which was adopted by a vote of 28 to 24. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, said while the amendment was being discussed in the Senate, "The silver question is not going to down at any man's bidding or at any party's bidding. There is a majority in both Houses of Congress for the free coinage of silver if no alien or subtle influences are exercised on members." Some take the ground that this vote has no bearing whatever on the silver question, but only indicates that the 28 Senators who voted for the amendment are opposed to the enactment of any law recognizing only a single standard of value.

Representative Springer's bill for an international monetary conference, which is considered to be a very important measure, has been referred by the committee on Foreign Affairs to a subcommittee consisting of Representatives Rayner, of Maryland; Hooker, of Mississippi; and Harner, of Pennsylvania.

Deficiencies in appropriations made by the billion dollar congress are still being reported to the House. A letter was received from the Department of Justice this week, asking that $1,629,563. be appropriated on that account for it.

No Democrat having the wellfare of his party at heart could look with any other feeling than regret upon the squabble of the Democratic members of the House, this week, over the report of the election committee in the contested election case of Noyes against Rockwell

An investigation has been made by an official of the department of Justice of the charges made by Assistant Secretary Nettleton against Superintendent Owen, but Secretary Foster is out of town and it is not known whether it is the usual white wash or not.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

GREENWOOD.

To the old settlers of the region about the forks of Crow river, the July 4, 1856 celebration at the village of Greenwood is a memorable event. In preparing for that occasion no pains were spared on the part of the inhabitants of the village and vicinity, to make it a success, amongst whom may be named Albert Talbey, J. D. Young and A. G. Sexton, in the jovial spirits of about one and twenty, and to make the occasion—perhaps the first of the kind to take place in the Crow River Valley—a success was the desire of all. It was soon decided that A. G. Sexton should be Marshal, but who should conduct the religious ceremonies of the occasion was rather a perplexing question. They were not all at that time of a religious turn of mind; finally a happy suggestion came from Albert Talbey, that Capt. John B. Edgar, of the vicinity would be a suitable person to carry out that part of the program, and after a consultation with that gentleman the matter was arranged accordingly. Capt. Edgar being at this time a strict church member, was not of the pharisaical kind, declining rather to the opposite being naturally, not only of a genial but jovial disposition, retaining many of the characteristics of his former life, that of a sea captain and being endowed with a fluency of speech and a fine address, was well suited for the occasion; and the Marshal, although eccentric in some respects, was a man of considerable executive ability, was well suited for the occasion.

The morning of the 80th anniversary of the birth of our nation found a patriotic and enthusiastic assembly at the village of Greenwood, which by the efficiency of the Marshal was soon put in order and the carrying out of the program was inaugurated, all participating with zeal, and amongst other things to do go Albert Talbey, the matter of refreshments especially that of a spirituous kind was not overlooked, which caused some of the proceedings to be carried out in a somewhat peculiar manner. The memorable declaration was read by Albert G. Sexton. The usual patriotic remarks by the enthusiastic pioneers were not wanting, and as the forenoon proceeded, the time came around for prayer and Capt. Edgar was on hand according to program to carry out that part of the ceremonies of the day. He was conducted to the stand by Marshal Sexton, both having become in the meantime inspired by the occurrences of the day, marched enthusiastically to the rostrum and on obeying the Captain before the audience the Marshal gave him a friendly push, at the same time remarking, "Now Captain, do your G—— ——", the captain however not absorbed at this early, made not only an appropriate but a very eloquent prayer, which was appreciated by all, including even the Marshal himself. The occasion was a success, not only in the matter of commemoration, but in enjoyment and reunion and cementing of friendships, and it is one bright spot in the memory of the old settler.

CORRESPONDENCE

COUNTY SEAT NEWS.

On Monday while in Buffalo we learned among other things that Dr. Boxall, who is attending to Dr. Barton's practice while he is taking a special course in Philadelphia, is well liked and working hard, but we would advise Dr. Barton to be looking up another substitute as this one cannot last very long at the present rate having already lost six pounds of valuable adipose tissue.

Jacob Ruff has moved his butcher business into Stokes' old stand on Ackly street while Stokes takes his old stand and will run a wholesale business.

Austin Knight was looking up some good teams to place in his livery which he expects to run after a couple of months.

Dr. R. O. Cady, Wright county's veteran M. D. is still in active practice and keeps his drug store.

The county officials seemed to be discharging their duties as faithfully and conscientiously as if they were not mostly all Democrats.

The greatest disturbance we noticed was in the county commissioner's room and was caused by the Monticello delegations who were there concerning a bridge at that place.

Several of the citizens were pleased to note that no saloons were running in their village and claimed that to be best for the place.

Ex-county commissioner Kingsley was a Buffalo visitor on Monday.

The people are all getting anxious to see something green, let them look at home. If Nebuchadnezzar was alive now he would have a hard time getting grass enough to keep him alive. The weather is cold and feed starts slowly. Farmers will finish seeding this week.

If we mistake not the fish law runs out about the 10th of May but the people have been catching them all the same.

Times do not improve as the McKinleyites predicted. Wheat 75 cents per bushel, coming down all the time; potatoes 20 cts. per bushel, eggs and butter down too. Put on a little more tariff. They say what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

THE man with a head for figures is around again, this time with a statement that the average number of letters written per head of the population is: England and Wales, 40; Scotland, 30; Ireland, 16; United States, 21; France, 15; Germany, 13, and Italy, 7.

THE queen of England began to rule when she was a lovely girl of 18 summers. History points to no ruler who has had a more prosperous reign. Her family has grown and taxes the public purse to the tune of $18,000,000 per year, but her subjects pay it without a growl.

A MAN was guillotined in Switzerland the other day for assaulting and murdering a school-teacher. It was the first execution in Switzerland for twenty-five years, capital punishment having been abolished in 1867, and that method of inflicting punishment having been resumed only recently.

THE most unhappy period of marriage, according to French divorce statistics, is for the period extending from the fifth to the tenth year. After that the figures drop rapidly. Only 28 per cent. of couples seek divorce between their tenth and twentieth years of union. Only one pair in 100 seek to cut the knot after the period of over thirty and under forty years.

THERE were incorporated in the United States during the past few days 421 corporations, with total capital of $121,222,380. Of the number 173 were mercantile and manufacturing companies, capitalized at $24,157,600; 11 were coal and iron companies, with $20,475,000, and 22 were light, heat, power and transportation companies, with capital $20,327,360.

Heretofore a man could deposit his valuables in the safe of the hotel and the proprietor was responsible for their return, regardless of the value. The new law limits his responsibility to $250. If there is a loss from any cause the owner must stand all beyond the amount of $250.

THE number of national banks in the United States is 3,711, an increase of 634 in two years. The greater proportion of increase has been at the south and west and on the Pacific coast. THE great bridge over the Mississippi river at Memphis is nearly completed. The formal opening will occur May 12, but trains will be able to cross before that time. The bridge and its approaches are three miles in length, and the bridge itself is three-quarters of a mile long. One of its spans extends 794 feet, making it the third largest in the world. A PHILADELPHIA lad of 14 constructed a flying machine from the odds and ends of sundry dismantled umbrellas and flew 40 feet perpendicularly from the roof of his sire's mansion. He secured in addition to the knowledge that the problem of aerial navigation is not yet solved a fine assortment of broken legs and arms and solid chunks of advice and admonition enough to last him well along toward his ninetieth birthday.

A PIN manufacturer in Ansonia, Conn., is about to utilize twenty barrels of imperfect pins in building a sidewalk in front of his residence. There is in that town a small piece of sidewalk built of scraps from the pin factory, which by corrosion has become so hard in a few years that it required much hard work in drilling and blasting with dynamite to make a hole large enough to set a telegraph pole, although it was but three or four inches thick. It bids fair to last as long as a sidewalk of solid brass.

A PHILADELPHIA spinster left $1,000 to insure proper care and comfort to a Maltese cat which had been favored among her household pets. The cat recently died, leaving a handsome family of five little kittens. Are the helpless progeny entitled to the maternal fortune or does it revert to the two-legged heirs of the departed spinster? Legislative wisdom seems utterly incapable of coping with the eccentricities of those who make wills, and the chances are that the innocent kittens will be thrown upon the cold charity of the world. The best they can hope for is the short end of a compromise.

THE oldest woman in the country who is a preacher, it is thought, is Rev. Lydia Sexton, of Seattle, now 93 years of age. She has been in service about half a century. For eight or ten years she was an exhorter before receiving a regular license to preach, in 1851. Ohio, Indiana and Illinois were her field prior to 1870, when with her husband she removed to Kansas. Seattle was adopted as her home three years ago. She has since then conducted many revival and other meetings, but failing eyesight threatens to terminate her activity ere long. She hopes to live to be a full hundred years old.

THE modus vivendi with Great Britain which has been renewed is substantially that agreed upon for last year. Under its provisions both governments will prohibit the killing of seals within the limits laid down in the treaty of 1867 with Russia, except 7,500 for the subsistence of the natives on the islands of St. Paul and St. George. The clause which has been added to the agreement provides for a settlement of damages sustained by Canadian poachers in case the arbitration goes against this country. The naval vessels selected by this country for patrol duty are the Ranger, Yorktown, Mohican and Adams.

MACHINE THAT FLIES.

New Aerial Navigator That Is Operated with Clock Works.

Michael Mahone, living in Rice county, is the inventor of a flying machine which, according to the model, is a success. The machine is about two feet long, the shape of a water vessel—air-wheels projecting from the top and sides resembling those used on a common windmill. The top wheel is to lift the thing from the ground, while the side wheels are to change from a straight course, which works to perfection. A clockwork machine manipulates the wheels, being put in operation by a cord pulled by the operator. A test revealed that weight two and one-half times that of the machine was carried around the room clear to the ceiling, the rudder wheel working perfectly.

MURDER AND TREASON.

Plotted by Wealthy Cattlemen in Wyoming—They Were to Pay $50 for Every Rustler Killed.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., April 23.—Through Sheriff Malcolm Campbell, of Converse county, it is learned that Sheriff Angus and County Attorney Bennett, of Johnson county, have procured evidence against the cattlemen. They unearthed the design of the expedition and extent of the depredations intended. The baggage of the members of the expedition captured proved, it is claimed, that the whole party can be indicted not only for murder, but for treason and insurrection. In the gripsack of Canton, one of the prominent men of the expedition, was found a list of seventy rustlers, who were to be either shot or hanged, also a list of ranch houses that were burned. They claim also to have the evidence that a contract has been made with the Texans of the party to give them five dollars a day and $50 all around for every man the rustlers killed.

The plan of operations, Sheriff Campbell says, included the capture of Buffalo and the murder of several men of that town, together with the destruction of their property. They were also to capture Casper and Douglas and visit vengeance on several men at each place. The operations of the expedition were to cover the counties of Johnson, National and Converse, and that the invaders were to be joined by a similar expedition gotten up in Evanston, Wyo., and at Billings, Mont. These two forces were to be joined in Johnson county the week following the date of the capture of the cattlemen's party. The evidence is said to implicate more than twenty prominent stockmen of Cheyenne, whose names have not been mentioned heretofore, also several wealthy stockmen of Omaha, as well as to compromise men high in authority in the state of Wyoming, who will all be charged with aiding and abetting the invasion, and warrants will be issued for the arrest of all these parties at an early day.

BUFFALO, Wyo., April 23.—A message in reply to the appeal from the people was received from President Harrison Friday evening. The message was circulated among the people and was well received. The people feel better now that they know the president and public are aware that they wish an investigation and justice done to all parties. The president says:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, April 22.—To C. J. Hagerson and Others, Buffalo, Wyo.: The governor of your state made a call upon me, in conformity with the constitution of the United States, for aid in suppressing domestic violence and threatened bloodshed. I could not know anything of the situation except as related by him and could not refuse the aid of troops to preserve the peace. The prisoners will, as soon as the state authorities are prepared to receive them, be turned over to the civil authorities and our connection with the matter will end unless further called upon to aid the state authorities to preserve the peace.

"I do not doubt that the executive and judicial authorities of your state will, without fear or favor, bring to trial and punishment those who have violated the law, by ordinary methods. Nothing will be done by me to shield any guilty person. My council, as your fellow citizen, is to use every effort to allay excitement and to proceed in all things peacefully and upon lawful lines. I will, of course, see anyone you send, but you will see that I can do nothing except to act with the state to prevent violence. Everything else rests with the state authorities.

"BENJAMIN HARRISON."

There are about 150 armed men in town organized as home guards, the organization being established last Sunday night. The streets are patrolled by a strong guard at night and all travelers to and from town are inspected. Rumors are current of other bands of invaders coming from Montana and elsewhere to assist the stockmen.

Six men were carried down with it and buried under the debris

When they were removed three were dead. They were: Bruce Eldridge, Frank Maynard and James Wilson. Three others were badly hurt, and it is learned all will die. The contrator, J. J. Adams, who was also on the wall, saved himself by swinging to a pole in midair until rescued. The collapse was probably due to the absence of a tie wall and too generally faulty construction. Suits will be brought against the contractor and the county for damages by the families of the dead men.

The communication closed with this sentence: "The killing of Sitting Bull was neither demanded nor directed by the department or under its direction."

A REMARKABLE LETTER.

A Prominent Professional Man's Extraordinary Statement.

[N. Y. Sun.]

To the Editor: SIR—As my name and face have appeared in your paper and the public prints lately, and as many of my professional brethren are wondering at it, I feel it only just that I should make an explanation. The statement published over my name was made ten years ago, after long and mature investigation, and I have never changed my mind as to the facts then stated. At that time I said, as a physician, that I believed Warner's Safe Cure was the best of all known preparations for the troubles it was advocated to cure, and I say so still. I know it is considered the proper thing for the medical profession to decry proprietary and other advertised articles; but why should they do so? As the late Dr. J. G. Holland, writing over his own name in Scribner's Monthly, said:

"It is a fact that many of the best proprietary medicines of the day are more successful than many physicians, and most of them were first discovered or used in actual medical practice; when, however, any person knowing their virtue and foreseeing their popularity secures and advertises them, in the opinion of the bigoted all virtue went out of them."

Dr. Holland was an educated physician, an unprejudiced observer, and he spoke from a broad and unusual experience. Proprietary medicines should not be decried. The evidences of their value are overwhelming. I have seen patients recover from gravel, inflammation of the bladder and Bright's disease after using Warner's Safe Cure, even when all other treatment had failed.

I make this frank and outspoken statement in the interests of humanity and because I know it to be true. I trust for the same reason you will give it to the public.

Respectfully, R. A. GUNN.

WHEN a man's best and engaged girl has thrown him overboard he is all at sea.—N. O. Picayune.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

A RECOVERED TREASURE.

I had a sort of throbbing in my head,
And felt a tiny bit too tired to play,
So mother came and put me into bed,
Although it was the middle of the day.

Then everything grew very dark and hot,
And in my ears I heard a humming sound;
I did not know if it was night or not,
Because the room went reeling round and round.

But I kept dreaming, dreaming all the time
About my garden, and the robin's nest;
About big trees I should have liked to climb,
And my new engine that I love the best.

And in my dreams a man would hold my hand,
And ask me kindly: "Had I any pain?"
And do strange things I could not understand,
And then his face would fade away again.

The sun was shining brightly when I woke;
I said to mother, who was by my side:
"I want my engine, mother." When I spoke
I cannot think why mother should have cried!

It was so nice to leave that tiresome room,
And run into the garden on my feet;
I found my red carnations all in bloom,
And oh, my mignonette did smell so sweet.

Now father brings me crowds and crowds of toys,
And rides me when I like upon his knee,
And never says: "Not good for little boys,"
So mother tells him he is spoiling me!

A DOUBTING LOVE.

Cecil Graham and His Half-Hearted Wooing.

"Aunt, what is your true opinion of Bessie Fallington?"

Old Mrs. Graham smiled over her gold spectacles at her nephew Cecil, and, with just a touch of humor, asked:

"Why?"

"Well, you know I've been paying her some attention —"

"And before committing yourself you wish to get the opinions of your friends."

"You state it bluntly, aunt, but I suppose that is about the truth."

"Then, Cecil, I cannot give you my opinion."

Cecil withdrew. As may be inferred he was an indecisive fellow, and of course was not now satisfied. Praise of Bessie from Aunt Mildred would have decided him. But he was left exactly as before, except that he could draw two opposing inferences. First, that if his aunt had not favored his suit she would have advised against it; second, that her refusal to give an opinion meant that she opposed it.

Such men as he adopt tests, but he had not ingenuity to invent one. The secret of such doubt is usually high self-esteem, which conjures an ideal worthy of affection. Oddly enough the luminous point in Cecil's ideal was fidelity. Bessie's social position was level with his, but would she be true? Wasn't she a coquette?

Tom Plotton was a down-city commission merchant; one of those men who forge ahead on the voyage of life, and by the twin propellers energy and determination reach a port of commercial success. Cecil and he had been college mates, but their late acquaintance had been only casual; confined to chance meeting at social gatherings. An outspoken man, but withal a thorough gallant, acquainted with all marriageable ladies worth knowing, he was just the man to render the opinion Cecil craved.

He was found in his glass-inclosed office, millerishly white from flour he had been examining before buying.

"Tom," began Cecil, after greetings. "I came to get your candid opinion of Bessie Fallington."

Plotton looked "fool" at him, but replied:

"Well, it depends on what the opinion is based. As a commission merchant, say, she'd be a prime failure; as a sea-captain, ditto; and as—"

"As a wife, for instance."

"That depends on the man who gets her."

"Well, for me, say?"

"Oho," exclaimed Plotton, running his finger through some coffee grains in a tin box, "you're in love with her, are you?"

"Frankly, yes."

"And before you put yourself in danger of making a matrimonial blunder, you're around getting opinions."

"Well—bluntly, yes. The same as you look into Bradstreet's before selling to a stranger."

"The stranger's credit is doubtful when I do."

"Well?"

"You doubt Bessie Fallington?"

"Good gracious, no!"

"Then what do you want an opinion of her for? If you don't doubt her, you're sure of her. That's as plain as A, B, C. If you love her and are sure of her worth, an opinion isn't worth a coffee grain, or shouldn't be. If you love her, you'll pitch in and move heaven and earth to get her."

"But I ask your opinion, nevertheless."

"Whether it cuts or not?"

"Yes."

"Give her up."

"Why?"

"First, if you doubt her, she won't suit you."

"I don't grant that."

"Second, she's a pronounced coquette; wants wealth in a husband; is willful; demands continual petting; admires men of distinction, men who can cut a dash, and especially men of decision, but will quarrel with him if her way is crossed; doesn't know a saucepan from a griddle, etc., etc., full of faults—but pretty as a spring morning."

Graham rose pettishly.

"You don't believe my opinion, I see. Very good; it's one sign you love the girl. Of course you're invited to her progressive euchre party next week. Go and criticise her—if you can in sight of her beauty. Then we'll meet and compare notes."

"Agreed. Good morning."

The next Tuesday evening found Cecil in Bessie's fashionable home. He had exactly poised his mind, but the first sight of her unbalanced it in her favor. She was rarely beautiful, and her welcome rang with genuine hospitality. It seemed impossible to criticise her; a good, true heart must be the center of such physical loveliness, but Doubt whispered: "Wait and watch."

Of guests there were seven ladies and eight gentlemen. Bessie had, therefore, to choose her first partner, and Cecil watched eagerly to see which this would be. It was Alfred Arnoldson Hughes, who had lately won literary fame. Bessie smiled brilliantly upon him as they took seats at the ace table.

"She's flirting with that fellow," muttered Cecil, as the bell rang for play.

When it rang again for changing tables, he was obliged to remain at the jack table, because, in watching, he had blundered stupidly. Bessie and the author won the game, and, though they were not partners in the next, the merriment between them continued, and he saw her dart a perfect coquette's smile at him as at the next he went down to the kings.

Tom Plotton was her next partner, but her sparkle was gone. She scarcely spoke to him.

"Humph," muttered Cecil, "quite a descent from literature to flour. Plotton and I will surely agree, for he is undoubtedly getting the cold shoulder."

Yet, despite himself, doubts would break into his adverse decision. "Perhaps she is true, after all; her spirits may be her way of entertainment. I may be making a fearful mistake."

Finally good luck advanced him and he became her partner for a game. She was all life again; exactly as she had been to the author. He believed he detected her wish to draw him on to loving her, and, though flattered, the old doubt grew stronger. The duties of hostess did not necessitate such action; she had tried to draw the author on; was trying him now. The only result would be that she would reject them both in ridicule.

Music and promenading through the spacious house followed cards. Cecil hastened to engage Bessie as companion, the author forestalled him. He walked angrily into the conservatory and stopped before a palm, ostensibly examining it, but in reality analyzing his state of mind. Was he jealous? If so, he really loved Bessie, but could he ask her to be his when all he had seen confirmed her coquetry?

Bessie and Hughes came near and stopped before a large plant, but with their backs toward Cecil, who was well screened from them.

"Miss Fallington," said the author, in the unmistakable voice of devotion, "do you like literature?"

"I love it," she replied. "Let me tell you a little secret that you must never reveal. I have lately had quite a number of poems published—anonymously, of course."

"Adorable," he cried, enthusiastically. "You must show them to me."

"By no means. You would criticise the poor little attempts."

"Not for worlds. They could not help being full of fire and genius. But would you not like to devote your life, yourself, to literature?"

"Oh! Mr. Hughes, my humble talents wouldn't last a fortnight."

"I don't mean in that way; though your talent would. I mean would you not like to live always in a literary atmosphere—in fact, Miss Fallington, as the wife of an author?"

"Pardon me, Mr. Hughes," she exclaimed, "but I do believe this rare plant is dying. I must tell father at once."

"Don't turn me aside," pleaded the author, trying to catch her hand. "I love you to—"

The some one was Tom Plotton, and he was coming directly for them.

"Mr. Hughes," he said, "they are asking for you in the parlor. They're discussing the authorship of a late anonymous poem. They want you to help them out."

"Very well," replied Hughes, gallantly, "and I think I can make a good decision on the latest and directest information."

"Don't you dare," exclaimed Bessie, with a light laugh, the meaning of which came in words as soon as the author was out of hearing.

"Oh! I'm so glad you came, for, don't you think, he was just declaring his love for me."

Both broke into a hearty laugh. Conviction struck Cecil. If this wasn't an evidence of heartless coquetry, what could be? He sincerely thanked his good fortune that his doubt had kept him from declaring his own love several months before in a similar place.

"And I have no doubt," he heard Plotton say, "that if I were now to say that I love you, you'd thank some one for interrupting, and laugh as heartily over my silliness, wouldn't you?"

"Perhaps I should."

"Though you have given me some encouragement, Bessie."

"Have I? Come, I want to tell father this plant is dying."

They moved away, and Cecil returned to the parlor, thrilling with pleasure at his narrow escape. He rejoiced greatly that Bessie Fallington had never had a chance to laugh at him. He shortly withdrew elated, but in the night, doubt of his decision troubled him. The heart and head would not agree. The stronger became the latter, the fuller was the former of regret that he could not have Bessie Fallington.

Next morning he hastened to Plotson's establishment and found that gentleman in his glass office looking quite happy.

"Happy commission stroke?" asked Cecil.

"Yes, an unusual one. Well, I suppose you have come to compare notes about Bessie Fallington."

"Yes."

"Well, what's your decision?"

"That she is a heartless flirt, and I think I'll give up all thoughts of her."

"You think so."

"Yes, only think, for I still can't decide, and I came again to get your opinion."

"Well, I'll let you have it. I don't think she would make you a good wife. I believe myself she is a flirt, and that she has lots of faults. If I were you I'd look elsewhere."

"This is your earnest, sincere advice, is it?"

"It is. But there is another reason why I'd give her up if I were you."

"What is it?"

"She is engaged."

"Engaged, and flirting around the way she did with you and Hughes and myself. It's awful. Who to?"

"Well, it's something of a secret yet. She engaged herself only last night."

"Last night? Not to Hughes?"

Plotton laughed heartily, and said: "Guess again."

"I can't. Give me the name."

"Thomas J. Plotton."

Cecil sank into a chair, and stared. Tom laughed boisterously, nine-tenths of it being pure, unalloyed joy.

"But, but you said," stammered Cecil, "that she was a flirt, no housekeeper, and full of faults."

"I know I did, and say so still."

"And going to marry her!"

"Yes, by all means, and we'll be as happy as anyone can be on earth. I love Bessie Fallington, and if she had ten times her faults, my love demands that I must have her, and it will have her. As I told you before, love will move Heaven and earth to get its object. I've won her, and let her faults be what they may, I love her and must have her."—Howard M. Hope, in Yankee Blade.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Tennyson's "Maud" is a very complete story, told with flying hints and musical echoes, as though Ariel had piped it in the little wild island of "The Tempest."—James Smetham.

—There are some advantages in being a queen. Notice the presents which the queen of Denmark received at her last birthday. They included a tortoise-shell fan studded with diamonds, some superb black lace studded with diamonds, a rug of cloth-of-gold and an antique porcelain watch.

—Dolly Adams, wife of the second president of the United States, is accredited with the honor of preparing the first ice cream ever used in this country. The occasion was a festivity that followed the inauguration of Washington as president in the city of New York, in the year 1789. The name of Dolly Adams should be held in esteem by all American young ladies.

—The most noted member of the Creek nation is Gen. Porter, of Muscogee, I. T., who has represented his people as agent at the national capital for many years. He is a very picture of Indian manhood and vigor, for he is tall, straight and swarthy. His eye glistens like an eagle's. His title of general arose from the skill with which he put an end to the three Creek insurrections in 1872, 1879 and 1884.

—A rival to "the beautiful whistler" has appeared in Paris in the person of Count John Zamoisky, a Polish nobleman, who some years ago married the daughter of Marshal Pelissier. His whistled notes are of great richness and flexibility, and of wonderful range. He can whistle the most intricate and brilliant compositions, and imitate a canary, a nightingale or thrush. The new whistler has already met with great success in the fashionable world at Vienna.

—The Meridian club of New York is one of the most social and informal of the literary clubs of the city, and it is considered an honor to be admitted to its membership. Only thirty ladies enjoy this honor, but the number present at the monthly meetings is always augmented by invitations. Marion Harland, Mrs. Lyman Abbott, Mrs. Lillian Betts, Mrs. Kate Upson Clarke, Mrs. Margaret Sangster and Mrs. T. J. Backus are among its prominent members.

—In Paris as elsewhere the libraries show that fully fifty per cent. of the books loaned out are novels. Dumas leads the list of popular authors, with Eugene Sue second. Bassac is going out of fashion, as is also George Sand. Of contemporary authors Zola is most in demand, and second to him is Jules Verne. Detective stories seem to have had their day. Gaboriau and De Montepin now being comparatively neglected. Poets are more read, in proportion to novels, in France than in England, and Victor Hugo is at the head of his class.

—Mark Twain at home dresses very plainly, as he thinks he can work better if he wears working men's clothes. He is always glad to receive visitors, and invariably insists that they shall play billiards with him. He has billiard and pool tables in his residence, and is himself an expert player. There are but few who can beat him. He talks very slowly, and drawls through his nose. He shuffles when he walks, smokes a clay pipe, and never laughs at his own jokes. Mark Twain is worth a million, which is quite a respectable sum for a man to make with his pen. It is said that he has a morbid, half-crazy fear that he will some day lose his fortune and come to poverty. He says he is now engaged with a book on which he has been at work, off and on, for over twenty years.

HUMOROUS.

—"You go to bed at twelve or one,
And thus destroy your health, my son."
"No, father," was the repartee,
"'Tis getting up that's killing me."

—"Does you pastor permit himself to make jokes in the pulpit?" said one lady to another. "O, yes," was the answer in an apologetic tone; "but they are never very good ones." — Washington Star.

—Schoolmaster — "This is the third time you have broken the rules of the school. I shall be obliged to punish you. Give me your hand." Female pupil—"And my heart too?"—Boston Transcript.

—He (seriously)—"We must devise some means of obtaining your father's consent." She—"Well, let's put our heads together, and—" (but after that he did not care whether they had papa's consent or not).—Puck.

—Snooper—"Why are you looking so sad, doctor? Have you had the misfortune to lose a patient?" Dr. Paresis—"Yes; unfortunately I have completely cured Mr. Scadds. He paid so promptly, too."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Weekly.

—A Good Point.—Owner — "These steps are too steep, carpenter. There are only five steps where there ought to be at least seven or eight." Builder—"But think how few there will be for the children to fall down."—Yankee Blade.

—Plenty in It.—Balfinch—"How is that little mining scheme of yours getting along? Any money in it?" Wooden—"Any money in it! Well, I should say so! All of mine, all of my wife's, and about fifty thousand that I got from my friends."—Boston Courier.

—A Trying Moment.—Justice—"Call the next, baliff!" Baliff—"The next case, yer honor, is a case of liquor." Justice—"Let the case be opened, and if it ain't better liquor than we've been havin' around here, I'll fine the whole business for contempt o' court and adjourn 'til Sunday!"

—A Rat's Dog.—"What the deuce did you sell me this dog for?" exclaimed an irate purchaser, coming into a fancier's shop. "I don't remember," responded the dealer, politely, "but think I sold him for ten dollars." "That's exactly what you did, and you said he was excellent for rats." "Isn't he?" inquired the innocent dealer. "No, he isn't worth a cuss. He lets them get away from him every time." "Well, isn't that excellent for the rats?" and the dealer asked the question so guilelessly that the purchaser only swore once and walked out.—Detroit Free Press.

A Mistaken Female.

Two gentlemen in the orchestra, Mr. Manhattan Beach and Mr. Uptown Gayboy, are disputing about their opera glass. Each one claims to have the best.

Mr. Gayboy—I can count the wrinkles in the face of that old woman in the box up there.

Mr. Beach—And I can count her gray hairs with mine.

The lady in the box observed that the two gentlemen were looking at her, so with a gratified smile she said to a friend at her side:

NEARLY BURIED ALIVE.

The Awful Experience Undergone by an Indiana Farmer.

In June, 1868, George Wellington, an Indiana farmer, fell into a trance which came near being the cause of his meeting a horrible death by being buried alive. Of course he was supposed to be dead, and the doctor who was called to make the examination so declared. But as Wellington had retired in perfect health the night before there were those among the neighbors and friends who strongly objected to any undue haste in putting the remains of the popular farmer under ground. Finally, however, arrangements for the burial were all completed and the supposed corpse loaded into a hearse. After the remains had been deposited in the wagon of death, and before the procession had left the house a runaway team collided with the hearse and unceremoniously dumped the coffin out upon the hard ground. This broke the trance, and the thoroughly frightened Wellington yelled: "For God's sake let me out of this!" What happened prior to this lucky accident is related in the farmer's own words as follows: "I retired in my usual health, but noticed that I did not fall asleep until after midnight. When I awoke the clock was striking five. I made a movement to get out of bed, but, to my amazement, could stir neither hand nor foot. I had full use of my ears, but could not open my eyes. I argued at first that I was not yet wide awake, but when my wife shook me and called me by name and I could not respond by moving even an eyelid, I became satisfied that I was in a trance. My mind was never clearer and my hearing was painfully acute. I made effort after effort to throw off the weight that seemed holding me down, but it was not until after the doctor had pronounced me dead that I felt any real alarm. Up to that time it had seemed as if I could soon get rid of the weight. Had a gun been fired in the room I am sure the spell would have been broken, but after the doctor's ultimatum I felt sure that I was to be buried alive. Horrible thought! It was all of a sudden that it flashed across my mind, but it troubled me more than I can tell. As I had never died before, how was I to know the sensation? Could the dead hear and think? Was the mind of a corpse in active operation when preparations were being made to bury it forever? These were problems which I could not solve, and the agony they caused me will never be known."—St. Louis Republic.

Russian Embroidery.

The fancy for all things Russian has brought about the gayest trimmings of the season in Russian embroidery, which is old-fashioned cross stitch done in mediæval coloring of red with blue, or with cream-color, red, and black, done on cotton fabrics, canvas, crepe, or batiste. It comes in stripes two or three inches wide on ecru batiste, alternated with insertions of Russian lace, open-patterned, and wrought in the same gay colors. This is used for full gathered blouses that are considered decidedly Russian when lapped to fasten down the left side, no matter whether they have a yoke or not. Such a blouse is seen on French dress of dark blue crepon, figured in the deep alligator marking, with four folds of the crepon forming a wide girdle around the blouse. The sleeves have crepon for the deep Russian caps to the elbows over close sleeves of embroidery finished at the wrist with Russian lace. The bell skirt of blue crepon lined with red silk has a foot border of a band of the gay embroidery with a blue moss ruche on each side.

Sleveless blouses of crepon, with horizontal bands of gay Russian embroidery across the front, are imported to be worn with coat waists that have open jacket fronts. These are shown in gray, ecru, white and black grounds. —Harper's Bazar.

How the Imperial Diamond was Named.

It is stated that the queen of Holland, now queen regent, was present when the first facet of the imperial diamond was cut. The circumstances under which the stone received the name of imperial were the following: It was exhibited by request to the queen and the prince of Wales, who happened to be present, on seeing it exclaimed: "It is an imperial diamond." The owners of the stone bestowed that title upon it, by which, no doubt, it will always be known. The imperial diamond was prominently exhibited at the Paris exhibition, where special measures were taken for its safe custody, as, for instance, the table on which it was placed being lowered into the ground at night and protected by an iron door. —Jewelers' Circular.

Ribbon Coronets.

With evening dress many girls are wearing ribbon coronets perched among their wavy tresses. The more simple ones are gennet of ribbon. The more simple ones are generally home-made. The frame can be bought and covered with twisted ribbon. In front the wired ribbon is fashioned into a gay butterfly. The coronets are dressy, and give a certain piquant air which the wearer is sure to appreciate. A novel ribbon coronet is made of black ribbon twisted with gold wire. Perched upon movable wire stems in front are three butterflys of fine gold fret-work. Another coronet, worn by a golden-haired maiden, was formed of a circlet of enameled heartsease. These were attached to a gold band, and had the effect of being carelessly strewn through the hair.—N. Y. Sun.

Street Garments.

As soon as heavy wraps are put off there will be in readiness any number of neat and elegant spring garments, and among them the three-quarter capes of soft corded silk, made with velvet yokes and collars, and lined with thin silk in paler or pretty contrasting color. The weight of these garments will be inconsiderable, owing to the nature of their material. Inferior silk, either for the outside or the lining, should be avoided, for a pretentious article or garment, which is novel, seeing it attracts attention, would appear to compel first-rate material and workmanship. Among these capes is one of black silk lined with mauve and another of moss green with velvet yoke collar and pale-yellow lining.—N. Y. Post.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Chandeliers and picture-frames, if rubbed occasionally with oil of lavender, will not be injured by flies.

—To stop bleeding apply tea leaves, or a paste of flour and vinegar. It is said that scrappings of sole leather will stop it immediately.

—A good supply of dish-towels is a necessity; do not try to get along with a few. Health and comfort are promoted by an abundance of every furnishing in the kitchen department.

—Some of the fires caused by lamp explosion might be averted by keeping the ornamental vases in the room filled with sand. The sand, promptly applied to an incipient fire, rapidly smothers it.

—To polish ivory, scour it with the finest sand paper; then moisten some whiting with oil, and apply with a piece of smooth flannel, rubbing it well, and finish off with a slightly-oiled linen rag.

—Spice Cake: One teaspoonful each molasses and sour milk, two-thirds teacupful butter, three eggs, one teaspoonful each of soda, nutmeg and cloves, one and a half teaspoonfuls cinnamon, three teacupfuls flour.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Doughnuts: One egg; one even cup sugar; one tablespoonful melted lard; heat well together; add scant cup of milk, even teaspoonful of soda, two of cream tartar, three heaping cupsful of flour, or enough to roll out, not very stiff; pinch of salt and little nutmeg.—Detroit Free Press.

—Cream Cake: Take one cup of sugar, break two eggs into a cup, and fill with sweet cream, add a pinch of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and two cupfuls of flour sifted together. Flavor with lemon and bake in small patty pans. The same recipe may be baked in three deep tins, and put together with jelly, lemon custard, sliced bananas, icing or fig jam, or it may be baked in one cake and iced.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

—Lemon Pie: Take one teacupful sweet milk, the grated rind and juice of lemon, one tablespoonful each of melted butter and of corn-starch, one teacupful sugar, yolks of three eggs—reserving the whites for the whites for the top. Mix well together and pour into a good crust and bake. When done, beat the whites stiff, add a little sugar and flavoring, and spread it over the pie; return it to the oven and bake it to a light brown.—Orange Judd Farmer.

DUSTING-SHEETS.

How to Preserve Furniture and Keep it Clean.

All good housekeepers should provide dusting-sheets with which to cover up pieces of fine furniture on sweeping days. They are best made of some very light, coarse quality of unbleached muslin, such as comes at four or five cents a yard. It is better to use this than to use old sheets, which do not wear long and usually have rents in them, through which the dust drifts. We can not protest too strongly against the use of sheets which have been taken from the beds to be put in the wash. It is an untidy fashion of careless chambermaids. The dusting sheets should not be used after they have become soiled, but should be washed like any other household linen. Small pieces of furniture in a room may always be removed to outside the door on sweeping days; but there are always one or two large pieces that must remain in the room during the ordeal and therefore should be covered up closely.

The proper care of furniture in this matter insures many more years of wear, to say nothing of the satisfaction of having one's belongings kept in a neat and dainty manner. Few things are more injurious to handsome furniture than the drifting cloud of dust that follows the broom of a capable sweeper in a carpeted room in the city, whatever care she takes. There is no comparison between the wear and tear of furniture in the city and in the country, and this is due more to the dusty location of our houses on the city thoroughfares, where we are subject to the ashes of the garbage man and the dust of every cart that is driven past the house. Country houses set back in green dooryards, well removed from the roadside, suffer no such inconvenience.—N. Y. Tribune.

To Finish a Bodice.

Press the shoulder-seams open, or both halves forward; I prefer the latter. The back seam, darts and under-arm seams open, while the side-form seam should be turned back. Press firmly, with a bit of crinoline between the iron and bodice, using a moderately warm iron. Press the seams of a velvet or silk bodice by running the seams over the front edge of the iron, after standing it erect, or the pressing will leave marks on the outer material. Before pressing, overcast the seam edges with colored silk, or bind them with the thin silk binding sold for this purpose. In either case, snip each seam twice at the waistline to prevent any drawing. Cut the sleeve seams in the same manner, and press these open. Scalloping the seam edges before binding or overcasting them is a French fancy. Leave seams half an inch wide, except the shoulder and under-arm seams, which should be three-fourths of an inch wide. Cut the seams evenly, or the exquisitely neat effect will never be attained. Set the belt half an inch above the bottom of the waist-line, and cat-stitch it to the center-back, side form and side gore seams. The belt should be a fourth of an inch smaller than the waist-line of the bodice, and thus keep it in place, and remove the strain.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Origin of "Bangs."

The bang is one of the latest innovations among women and girls. It had its origin in the reformatory for girls on Blackwell's island, New York. The inmates were in the habit of getting away, and it was difficult to recognize them after changing their apparel. It was first suggested to crop them, but this was considered too sweeping. The bang was then adopted, and it was a perfect mark. For some reason or other the style struck the popular fancy, and in the course of a few years after its adoption as a mark in a reformatory it became one of the fads of fashion.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

Peculiarities of Our Language.

They stopped to look in the store windows, and she remarked that she must soon have a new dress.

"And I must have a new suit," said her husband; "the one I have on is worn out."

"How can that be?" asked his wife, "it looks as good as new."

"But I have worn it out all the same," he said, and she tumbled to the situation.—Detroit Free Press.

The May Wide Awake

Opens with a delightfully fantastic and oriental rhyme descriptive of the birth of the gamut. It is by Theron Brown with a frontispiece illustration by Burgess, and is called "The Bamboo Fife." The leading article of the number (splendidly illustrated) is Adaline Fordham's stirring description of "A Mediæval Stronghold," the great French castle of Pierrefonds, which, dismantled by Richelieu, has been restored by the famous French architect, Viollet-le-Duc. Philip Hale's story, "A Grain of Sand," is one of the good things of the number. Miss Helen Gray Cone tells about "A Picture Book of 1789"—William Blake's home-made and hand-made "Songs of Innocence;" Alexander Black has a unique sleeping-car story, "Upper Nine;" M. B. Ryerson contributes a charming story of a little studio girl, "Phebe Stout—Sculptor." There is a bright story for Decoration Day, "Almost a Deserter," by Miriam Brastow, and a stirring ode for the same memorial occasion, addressed to American boys and girls—"Decoration Day," by Elbridge S. Brooks; Mrs. Emma Huntington Nason has a charming set of verses, "My Lady of Make-Believe;" Lieut.-Col. Thorndike gives in his series of One Man's Adventures, an account of his "Getting Away from Gibraltar."

Catarrh--Remove the Cause.
I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—Miss Josie Owen, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off. No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. I have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—Mrs. Josephine Polhill, Due West, S. C. S. S. S. cures Catarrh, like it does other Blood diseases, by eliminating the poison which causes it. Treatise on Blood and Skin mailed free.

DELANO DIARY.

—Call on Wittman for Presbyterian billiards.

—Bob Morris has sold his tonsorial outfit to B. Yancy.

—O. W. Mapes, of Watertown, was sampling the Delano wheat market today.

—Mrs. William Faust, of Rockford, a daughter of Thomas Prestidge died this week.

—Mrs. Louis Kaspohl was taken suddenly ill last night but at last accounts was improving.

—Read about the early bird catching the worm and call on Charley Conzet for more about the subject.

—Frank Cramer wants the man that borrowed his wheelbarrow to return it at once, as he needs it in his business.

—A meeting of the Board of Town Supervisors will be held at Clerk Kaspohl,s offices, tomorrow, Saturday April 30.

—The big mule team of the Ries Bottling House of Shakopee was in town this morning. Looks as if they were expecting summer.

—Several cases of Tonsilitis have occured among the juvenile portion of our community the past week but no well marked cases of Diphtheria.

—Ic Murphy, one of Corver county's untemified. seems to have pulled through the Eagle's attack all right and was seen on our streets again today.

—Charles S. Hawker, of Hamline University presided with that ease and dignity born only of experience, at the Teachers' Association in Delano last Saturday.

—"Historical Facts" next week will be mostly concerning Rockford and largely from quotations from D. B. Farnham's history in the Eagle a few years ago.

—Chairman of the board of supervisors of the town of Franklin, James Sherry, was an attendant on the proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners on Monday.

—Frank Schaffer was the recipient of a serenade by his fellow band boys on Monday evening and an enjoyable occasion it was to the participants. Frank is sweet sixteen.

—Look out for the 5th of May and have your premises and alleys cleaned and swine and butchering business out of town so that the Board of Health will not have to trouble you.

—John Cunningham, Wash Rader, C. H. Voise, O. L. Billings and J. D. Young were elected to represent the Delano Republicans at the convention held at Buffalo on Wednesday.

—Al Eppel and Lea Dedrick are at work on the house purchased from the Catholic society and formerly occupied by the priest. They will soon have a neat and commodious residence for some renter.

—George P. Schaffer is fitting up his residence on River Street and Simon Weldele is getting his store room in order for him to move into soon. The ex-Mayor proposes to have things nice in his old days. Good for George.

—News was received a couple of days ago by the friends of William Lyle that he was sick with Pneumonia in the pineries of Wisconsin. Mrs. Timothy Shaw went at once to nurse him which will insure him having the best possible care.

—Several of the schoolmates and friends of Miss Maud Galley gave her a surprise on Tuesday evening by holding a birthday party at her residence without her invitation. Things passed off none the less merrily as they found her ready to welcome her friends even if they did come unceremoniously. Of course it would not be polite to announce her age to the public.

—The Cokato delegation to the Republican county convention on Wednesday got off here and refreshed themselves preparatory to taking the rest of the trip and the arduous duties they would have to meet at the county seat. Coming from a temperance town and going to a temperance town they claimed to be a temperance delegation, straight, but we think a majority of them believe in "when you are in Rome do as Rome does."

—The meeting of the Teachers' Association held at the school house on Saturday last was well attended and as a whole passed off pleasantly. The Secretary's report appears in another column. The superintendent should have notified those on the programme so that they might prepare for the occasion. Several rather pointed criticisms whether intentional or otherwise were made. These meetings are scarcely to be considered the proper places for showing up the individuals whose shortcomings can be reached through other channels and some of the orators would do well to consider this point before the next meeting.

County Cullings.

The third Quarterly Meeting of the M. E. church of Delano District will be held at Montrose on May 8th.

Chairman Thompson presides with as much dignity at the meetings of the County Commissioners as is generally found in bodies of that kind.

John Schefchek, of Maple Lake, now holds the position of County Commissioner having been chosen to fill the vacancy occasioned by the moving out of the county of A. D. Kingsley.

The County Commissioners with their new member took a different view of the appropriating of $10,000. for a bridge at Monticello and considering it illegal rescinded the motion passed by the board as previously constituted.

The County Commissioners will meet on Tuesday, May 3d at 10:30 at Buffalo to hear the report of a committee on the Monticello county road through the village. The committee appointed is Schefchek, Flannigan and Hoefer.

Commissioner John Schefcheck voted to rescind the motion granting $10.000. to build the Monticello bridge, but was placed on the committee to investigate the matter of laying out a county road in the village so that people are on tip toe of expectation to know what course he will pursue next.

The Republicans at their convention this week at Buffalo accepted the resignation as Chairman of the county committee of the Hon. J. N. Stacy and elected in his stead William E. Culkin who is also President of the Republican county league. This innovation occured at the instigation of some of the wire pullers in the interest of harmony. Something had to be done. This lets out one of the most indefatigable workers and one of the oldest manipulators of county politics.

Teachers' Association.

Meeting of "Teachers' Association" Saturday, April 23, called to order at ten o'clock by Superintendent Lindsley; and Mr. Charles Hawker, of Hamline, chosen Pres. and Miss Irene Cheeley, Sec. after which the meeting was opened by a song by the girls of the High School with guitar accompaniment by Edele Freeman. "The Teachers of Wright County". It was appropriate and very well rendered indeed. The first two subjects being postponed the discussions were opened by Mr. B. F. Shaver assistant Supt. of School's of Hennepin Co., on "Ideal Education". Mr. Shaver's lecture was very fine and it is to be regretted that every Wright Co., teacher could not have heard it, and those from the village and county who could have heard missed a treat that can be duly appreciated only by those who heard it. If it can be done we will see to having it published in some of our local papers so that those who could not be with us may have the benefit of it.

Mr. Hawker followed with some good suggestions also Mr. Brewmuch, of Howard. Then Superintendent Lindsley followed with some good advice to parents and teachers; then Prof. J. G. Love, of Delano. Next came, "How to Teach Advanced Reading," by Miss A. M. Lindsley. She did her subject justice, and was followed by Mr. Shaver, seen by Mr. Lindsley, Mr. Hawker and Mr. Brewmuch.

After noon session opened at 1:30 by a cornet solo by Rev. Billings, Oscar Ellard Full Well, which was well performed followed by the subject, "A Review of Joseph Payne's Lectures on Education," taken up by Mr. Love, and rendered in a very able and pleasing manner. One thought in Mr. Love's remarks deserves to be emphasized. "We may secure a desire to do many things for us, but we can not secure one to learn for us."

Mr. Shaver followed with some truly chosen gems of thought then Mr. Lindsley reviewed kindergarten work and Joseph Payne. Next a quartette of Mrs. Lindsley's pupils sang "Dreamland Faces", and sang very well indeed. Volunteers were called for to discuss the subject of "School Government," and Miss White, of Delano, invited to make some remarks. Miss White responded with the promptness which is characteristic of her, and her remarks showed her to be fully prepared to discuss the subject, if she wished to use the time, not being a member of the association. Afterward Mr. Cressy, of Mound City, Mr. Shaver, Mr. Hawker and Mr. Rheinmuth responded on the same subject. Next Miss Florida of Rockford, took the subject of Primary Geography and we think her presentation of the subject was very pleasing and attractive. Mr. Corey followed with more advanced geography. Then Mr. Shaver and Mr. Lindsley. The subject of Orthography was then discussed, first by Mr. Ingerson, of Delano, then by Mr. Liedsley, Mr. Rheinmuth and Mr. Love.

"The best system of Penmanship and how to pursue it," was then discussed by Mr. Love Mr. Lindsley after this spoke of the "Minnesota Teachers' Reading Circle." Mr. Lindsley is a tireless, earnest worker himself, and tries to inspire all his teachers to be workers. Miss Quinn, of Montrose school closed the discussions with "Physical Culture in School." A vote of thanks was then tendered the Delano people for the courtesy shown the teachers; then the meeting closed with "America," sang by the audience.

IRENE CHEELEY, Sec'y.

Boycotting Business.

MR. EDITOR GAZETTE—Dear Sir. We are accused, in the last issue of the the Tribune, of making a false summary of its arguments; but, when anything is admitted to be thus and so "for the sake of argument," is it not natural to conclude that, by the one who thus concedes, the opposite is held to be right?

We are accused, also, of changing our views when the fact is, those words which are construed to indicate a change of views are quoted from our first letter on the subject. Thus placing a false construction on what has been said is not only ungentlemanly, but a positive violation of the spirit of honesty.

"The Tribune contends on the other hand that after every election good feeling should prevail," etc. We will not contend and have not contended on that point. We agree there; but we believe that, in order to secure this state of things, every man must consider "the law of charity" and the golden rule. Every man must vote from principle. Is that sentiment un-American?

The Tribune went so far into generalities, (refusing to "prejudge the local question") that we ask for a little generality on the other side, therefore we mentioned the Parsons, New York and Sioux City cases. We hope since the Tribune can see what does and does not base on the question, it will not swing off again.

But if the Tribune does not wish to discuss "the local question" let us stop right here,, for there is nothing between us.

For the sake of the person, whoever he may be, at whom the Tribune makes a thrust when it says, "he has doubtless been grossly misinformed", etc., we would say, Let not the Editor so flatter himself, his fame has not, to any great extent, reached Delano, or, at least, us. We do not antagonize any man. We simply ask the privelege that, when we are injured in an election or elsewhere, we may run away in order to avoid further injury being done us.

Respectfully,
REV. J. R. DAVIES.

DELANO, April 25, '92.

Making Wood.

EDITOR GAZETTE.—The Buzzard of last week has been "making wood", so much so that even the "hireling" of the concern objects to further expectorations from the "swineigel". Of course he objects to the proprietor of the GAZETTE for giving me a chance to refute his falsehoods, lies and slanders. He would like to have it his own way. He accused the last years board of supervisors of gross dishonesty, compared them to the Tweed ring in New York, but don't want them to explain and defend their actions. He charged that all the money for Road and Bridge improvements in the town was expended in one (Ziebarth) road district. This of course is a lie. the Ruckoldt bridge on which $800.00 was expended is in road district No. 1; the Quady bridge, put up at a cost of $203.50 is in Dist. No 2 (Ziebarth); the Marth bridge, which cost $784.00 is in Dist. No. 3. But that is no matter to him, according to him all of it is in the Ziebarth road district, to give greater effect to his contortion.

He next tells his readers that the supervisors gave away the contract for these bridges on the receipt of one bid. This is another lie of his, but don't correct him. he is infallible, and whatever he says must be true. The town records tell a different story. It says that on the Quady bridge two bids were received, one from Swan Erickson, of Delano, for $275.00 and one from E. F. Ziebarth for $198.50. On the building of the Marth bridge also two bids were received and another person was present to bid on the work, but as he was not able to give a bond, his bid was not accepted. The lowest bidder also got the job in this case.

He tries to make people believe that the Marth bridge could be built for one half what E F. Ziebarth received for the job, but this would be about the same as the old wooden bridge used to cost at said point. But don't object to what he says or he will set his mud battery in motion, the C. S. P. will be in his element.

To show the reader how unjust his attack on the Supervisors and on me are I will here give the specifications of the Quady bridge, the only bridge in which I have a slight personal interest. The bridge is 90 feet long of 6 span each 15 feet. The piles are of white oak, red elm or white ash, not less than 8 inches at small end and to be four to each bent. Caps, 10x12 square white oak to be bolted to piles with iron drift bolts 1 inch thick and bolts to be driven at least 8 inches into piles. Stringers to be either pine, white oak, red elm or white ash 3x12 or hewed stringers at least 8 inches square at the ends and 5 in each bent if hewed and 6 if sawed. Planks to be 14 feet long and 2 inches thick, either pine, oak or elm, no wider than 10 inches and to be held down at ends with a 2x4 scantling and one spike at each end of plank. Railing to consist of 2 pieces 2x4 or its equivelent in round tamarac poles and to be bolted to a 4x6 hard wood or pine and to be 4 feet high. Piles to be braced by spiking a 2x6 hard wood, pine or elm, cross ways, and to be driven at least 5 feet into solid ground.

This bridge was built according to these specifications, it stands there and bears inspection and I ask any sane man if there was any chance for boodle at the cost of $198.50, or if a bridge of the same length could be built any cheaper. WM. ZIEBARTH.

PHYLOSOPHY.

The signs is bad when folks commence
A-finding fault with providence,
And balkin' 'cause the earth don't shake
At ev'ry prancin' step they take.
No man is great 'till he can see
How less than little he would be Ef stript to sel, and stark and bare
He hung his sign out anywhere.

My doctern is to lay aside
Contentions and be satisfied.
Jest do your best, and praise or blame
That follers that counts jest the same.

And it's the man who does the best
That gits more kicks than all the rest.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO.

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

REV. CHARLES CHINQUY, an ex-Catholic priest has been delivering lectures this week to Minneapolis audiences.

THE Free Binding Twine Bill came up before the House on Monday and passed by a vote of yeas, 183: nayes, 47. It is not expected to meet with such good luck at the hands of the Senators, on the contrary it is thought they will vote against its becoming a law. Free Binding Twine would be an advantage to Minnesotians.

NEW YORK acts as a balancing power in the nomination of President for both the leading parties. Both the Democrats and Republicans seem to think all that is necessary to do is to find a candidate that can carry New York and his election is assured. We would not be surprised if some party would learn that such is not the fact.

IN a letter from Washington to his paper, the Louisville Courier-Journal, Henry Waterson says that it would not do to nominate either Cleveland or Hill, as neither could carry the state of New York. Hill he claims is entirely out of the fight and he thinks it would be asking too much to expect the followers of Hill in his own State who have oppesed Cleveland to fall into line for the latter now.

SOME of our Republican organs are claiming a grand Republican victory for their party in St. Paul. Of course it is a Democratic defeat all right enough, but where is the Republican victory in electing Col. Wright the Prohibition candidate for Mayor of the city? Did not the Prohibition people prevail? Have they not the satisfaction of having selected the candidate which was endorsed by everybody else but the Democratic leaders, and having received a majority of the votes obtained the office. Republicans lose no chance to cry victory whenever they have half a chance.

THE Delano Eagle and the BUFFALO GAZETTE have been at war for some time. The battle has ranged over a wide area of philosophy, politics and art. The current outburst is over the proficiency of each editor in Latin and German. He of the GAZETTE quoted a German proverb in his last issue. The writer of the Eagle goes for the grammar and spelling and fires away about qualifying articles and capitalization. And, all the time this hair-splitting is going on, these amiable gentlemen seem so positively forgetful that the country has to be saved and Donnelly is still at large.—Minneapolis Journal.

A Free Country.

We are proud that we live in a free country. Where the people govern themselves. And yet there are some public places where business is done that are made so unpleasant that many people cannot enjoy themselves, but are made uncomfortable and oftentimes obliged to leave. It seems to us that in such places as public meetings, justice courts, post office lobbies, stores, offices, public conveyences, and other public places people should not be deprived of their right to the pure air of Heaven furnished so bountifully by the Giver of all good, by having it so polluted with tobacco smoke as to be injurious to the eyes, making them fill with water, as to irritate the throat and air passage and keep people constantly hacking and coughing. It seems as if a due consideration of the feelings of others would restrain men who must smoke from doing so in such places as we have mentioned for a few hours at a time or if they cannot of retiring to a smoking room or going into the open air for a short time instead of driving others out. We maintain that the air is free and should not be polluted by one or a dozen individuals to the exclusion from public places of a dozen or less persons whose right is just as good. Let country smokers do as they do in cities, desist from the habit in public where it is going to annoy ladies, children and very many men.

THE time for the holding of the National Republican Convention at Minneapolis is drawing nigh. Little more than four weeks remains in which to prepare for the great event. To arrange and re-arrange states for nomination. To settle on some one who is willing and who can be nominated with some kind of unanimity to head the ticket of the G. O. P. in the next campaign. A campaign that is likely to prove one of the most hotly contested our country has witnessed for years. The political kaleidoscope presents the chances of the different candidates in such never ending variety of phases it is impossible for the most profound student of political science to hazard a guess as to who will be the drawer of the coveted prize. Harrison was for a time apparently the leader but his star seems, like Hill's of the Democratic faith, to have run its course, and ere the convention day, is likely to have been hidden from view. At present the most incandescent object in the dark canopy of the Republican party is the Hon. James G. Blaine and unless something turns up to eclipse the comet before June 7 it is not at all likely there will be a chance for any ordinary star and he will be the nominee.

MONTICELLO BRIDGE.

Letter From the County Attorney.

MR. EDITOR. — Having received many inquiries, from different parts of the county, for information in regard to the Monticello bridge matter, with your permission will answer through your columns.

The last legislature appropriated two thousand dollars towards the bridge and appointed a committee whose duty was and is to locate the bridge, determine the kind, let the contract or contracts, oversee the work and to draw orders and pay for it.

Gen. Laws, 1891, Title A 20.

The Legislature authorized Sherburne county to issue bonds not to exceed three thousand dollars, the town of Big Lake not to exceed two thousand five hundred, the village of Monticello not to exceed two thousand, the town of Monticello not to exceed four thousand, and the county of Wright not to exceed six thousand dollars.

Chap 481, Special Laws, 1891, says, sec. 2, * * * "and the board of county commissioners of said Wright county shall, annually, after the issuance of said bonds, levy a tax, in addition to all other taxes, sufficient to pay the interest accruing yearly upon said bonds; and when any of the principal is about to become due, they shall in like manner levy a sufficient amount of taxes to pay such principle when due."

The law does not authorize the county commissioners to appropriate one cent from the county treasury, nor give them any discretion in the matter, but only authorizes them to issue bonds and levy a tax, "in addition to all other taxes", to pay these bonds. The law is the same as to Sherburne county except the amount, and the commissioners of that county have refused to issue bonds and burden the people of that county with this extra tax.

The commissioners of Wright county are bound by this law, and if they see fit can issue bonds, not to exceed six thousand dollars, and levy this extra tax upon the tax-payers of Wright county. They can do nothing else legally, and no money can be drawn from the county treasury otherwise. This law must be obeyed, if the law is not satisfactory the only remedy is to change it.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of some to violate the law in this matter; and the county is being put to a great deal of useless expense for the sole purpose of evading it; the county having been put to nearly one hundred dollars needless expense in trying to lay a county road through the incorporated village of Monticello, for the sole purpose of evading the law. The commissioners of Sherburne county had the courage to settle the matter—they refused to vote the tax in the shape of bonds; our commissioners will finally obey the law—vote the six thousand dollar tax or refuse to do it. That is all there is to the bridge matter as far as Wright county is concerned. Whatever course the commissioners may pursue, one thing is certain—that is no money shall be paid from the county treasury unless it is appropriated according to law. Very Truly,

W. H. CUTTING.

GREENWOOD.

The history of the village of Rockford being so interwoven with the township of Greenwood, the writer takes the liberty to make a few quotations from the History of Wright county by D. R. Farnham and published in the Delano Eagle from 1881 to 1883 giving the beginning of Rockford, in which he states that Geo. F. Ames and Joel Florida, of Boone county, Illinois, and Guilford D. George, of Boston, all natives of the same locality in Vermont were prospecting in Minnesota for locations in 1855. "Arriving at the then undeveloped village of Minneapolis, by accident they heard of the beauties of the big woods and the rapid growth of the only city, Greenwood, and of the splendid unused waterpowers along the Crow river, and concluded to visit the place; they arrived at Greenwood, October 4, 1855, and the next day visited what was then called the best water power on the river, supposed to be held by John M. Burt. It was supposed by the proprietors of the townsite of Greenwood that the dam and mills would be built near the mouth of Edgar's creek, very near the line of the townsite, as most of the falls or rapids were at that point and on Burt's claim. But Ames, Florida & George found a more available millsite below Burt's, so they purchased the claim from William Frazer. Mr. Ames took this as a pre-emption claim (the northeast quarter of section 29), Mr. Florida the northwest quarter of the same section, Mr. George the southwest quarter of section 20, and a Mr. C. O. Thomas the southeast quarter of section 20. James Goodwin took the southeast quarter of section 29; the last claim was purchased by Mrs. Mary H. Ames, a sister of Mrs. G. F. Ames (and afterwards Mrs. George), in the spring of 1856, and pre-empted it. A small portion of this claim is in the village of Rockford. Messrs. Ames, Florida & George formed a copartnership then and there for the purpose of building a mill and laying out a town. The capital invested was $4,500, Mr. Ames taking four shares of $500 each, Mr. Florida three, and Mr. George two, making nine shares of $500 each. Messrs. Ames and Florida returned to Illinois, and on the 6th day of October 1855, G. D George became the first permanent settler in the town of Rockford. The 18th day of November 1855, Isaac P. Harvey and Cyrus Redlon and his sons, Frederick and Frank, arrived from Illinois; they took up their residence with Mr George. Mr. Frazer had built a small cabin near where the liberty pole is in the village, in front of the present residence of Mrs. George. Mr. George and company built a small addition, but it was rather close quarters. Mr. Harvey took a claim on the northwest quarter of section 20, Mr. Redlon on the northeast quarter of the same section. About this time, in November, James Sheridan took a claim on the east side of Lake Charlotte in section 5, and David Cook on the south side of the same lake in section 6; they moved onto their claims in the spring of 1856. In January 1856, Thomas Shippy built a house on his claim and became a permanent settler.

August, Henry and Christian Wolff took claims on sections 2 and 3, in the fall of 1855, and built a house; they all lived together in the spring of 1856. Henry Grehling and Fred Lieder settled on section 10, and Fred. Peikart on section 9 during the fall or early winter of 1855-56. In February 1856, Calvin Steward and his nephews, Washington Steward and Jackson Steward, came to Rockford; they walked from near Fort Atkinson, in Wisconsin. They came partly to find homes and to work for Ames, Florida & George, clearing land and building a house for the rest of the company who were to come in the spring. Calvin Steward took a claim on the southeast quarter of section 18, and Jackson Steward on the northeast quarter of section 17. They all went into Mr. George's house and it was full. Two or three acres of village timber was cut that winter and spring, and the walls of a large double log house put up near the river, now on the southwest corner of Bridge and Mechanic streets; the site is now occupied by N. T. Derby's store. The 30th day of June 1856, quite a large party arrived from Illinois. The town company decided to purchase a steam saw mill to saw lumber for the proposed dam and mills and supply the settlers with lumber until the water mills were completed. The travel from Minneapolis to Greenwood had been by a very poor and crooked road by the way of Wayzata; there was no road laid out direct to the cities. The present Rockford and Minneapolis road is a part of the Minneopolis and Forest City territorial road. By act of the legislature passed February 56, 1856, Thos. Hanson, Geo. H. Fletcher and D. R. Farnham were appointed a committee to survey and lay out a territorial road from Minneapolis via Greenwood to Forest City. The committee met at Minneapolis the 24th of June 1856, and employed R. J. Mendenhall as surveyor; he had just arrived and this was his first work. Wm. B. Burril, now of Greenwood, was one of the chainmen. The committee acted as axmen, chainmen and everything else. The road has never been changed, except to get it onto the original survey. Like all other pioneer road surveying, it was a difficult job; through brush, swamps and heavy timber, rain, mud and mosquitoes, with many experimental lines to run through a country of lakes, marshes and hills, it was slow tedious work. When about half way to Rockford they were overtaken by the Rockford town proprietors, with about a dozen teams, the steam saw mill and some 20 men besides women and children. They cut out the road, built bridges and camped wherever night overtook them. They arrived at Rockford and forded the river the 30th day of June, mill and all hands safe. With this party came G. F. Ames, Joel Florida, William Sleight Thomas Steele, Joseph Balls, Wm. O. Eldred, Amos Denny, Thomas Prestidge, Joel Beebe, W. W. Burch and others. Some of the families stopped at Minneapolis for a while, but many came to Rockford and lived in tents for a short time until they could build log cabins. C. C. Jenks came to Rockford at the same time, but not from Illinois; he had been living at Anoka and Rice Creek for four or five years, but had formerly resided at Rockford, Illinois, and when the time came to name the town, Amesville, Big Rock and other names were talked of, but Mr. Jenks suggested Rockford and stuck to it, and it was finally adopted."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, April 29, 1892.

Mr. Harrison did not return from his visit to New York feeling in a very good humor. The egotism of the man is so great that he expected to have secured pledges of support from the New York bosses, and his failure to do so made his disappointment correspondingly great. The fact commented on here that on the day he was in the Metropolis the Republican dailies of that city, as if by agreement, were full of talk about the probability of Blaine after all becoming the candidate. Mr Harrison must have regarded this as significant; it was certainly so regarded here. Whatever the outcome, it is apparent to even the most casual observer that the Harrison boom is rapidly losing ground here.

The Naval appropriation bill, recently passed by the House, has been reported to the Senate with amendments largely increasing the appropriations for new ships. Senator Daniel's amendment appropriating $300,000. for the international naval review next year was reduced to $50,000.

The substitute for the House Chinese exclusion bill, which was passed by the Senate early this week, is in the hands of a conference committee, and although the sentiment of the House is strongly in favor of a more rigid exclusion than is possible under the present laws, which the Senate substitute extends for ten years from expiration, it is regarded as probable that the House may accept it as the most that can be gotten from the Senate.

The House Judiciary committee will report a resolution authorizing an investigation of the Pinkerton detective agencies. The resolution to be reported is a substitute for the one offered by Representative Watson, of Georgia, several months ago, which contained charges against the Pinkerton system.

Representative Byran's bill placing lumber on the free list, which is a duplication of the old Mills tariff bill, would have been reported to the House this week by the Ways and Means committee, if the Republican members of that committee had not requested a postponement of final action until the next meeting of the committee.

James R. Young, the deposed executive clerk of the Senate, having failed to get the Senate to investigate the charges of betraying executive secrets under which he was dismissed, is now endeavoring to have an investigation of the charges made by the standing committee of newspaper correspondents, in charge of the press galleries of Congress, the ground being that if the charges be true he is not entitled to the privileges of those galleries, as a reputable newspaper correspondent.

Senator Hill, speaking of the apportionment of New York: "The apportionment is both morally right and constitutionally correct. The pretence of the Republicans that it is unconstitutional will avail them nothing. The courts must and will decide against them, because their claims are frivolous and ungrounded. For several years the Republicans refused to make an enumeration, to make an apportionment when they had an opportunity to do so themselves, and now they must suffer the consequences of their folly."

Everyone regrets, and none more than the gentleman himself, that Representative Enloe, in a burst of temper called Commissioner Raum a liar. It was an unfortunate occurance, viewed from any standpoint. True, Mr. Enloe contends that Mr. Raum had in a private conversation admitted doing the thing which he so positively denied when testifying to the House committee, but his testimony could have been officially contradicted and disproved without the use of language that should never be permissable among gentlemen.

Chairman Hatch, of the House Agricultural committee, expects to get his anti-option bill before the House as soon as the free binding twine bill is disposed of. He thinks the bill will pass, but his opponents are very active and they say they expect to defeat it.

Senator Sherman was evidently acting under instructions when he amended Senator Teller's resolution calling upon the President for information concerning the international monetary conference, which rumor says has been arranged for, with the words "if not incompatible with the public interests," for Mr. Harrison in his letter in answer to the resolution says: "In my opinion, it would not be compatible with the public interest to lay before the Senate at this time the information requested." He promises that the Senate shall have the information "at the earliest moment after definite information can properly be given," which probably means when it can best be used to aid Republican interests in the coming Presidential campaign. There will be some interesting talk in the Senate on Mr. Harrison's letter.

It caught the eye of a customs inspector, and at once Mr. Taylor was pounced upon. He was led into the examining-room, where he was unrolled and thirty-seven yards of silk were taken off of him.

THERE are two factories in Philadelphia that use up in the season one hundred horse hides a week each to cover baseballs. They are alum-tanned. They sell at 14 cents a foot and sheepskins $3.50 to $8 a dozen. The best regulation balls sell at $1.25 to $1.50 each. A piece of rubber forms the center, around which yarn is wound by hand. Then they are covered. They are "dead balls and won't bounce."

LATER.

St. Paul Election.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 4.—The result of the city election here yesterday was a complete surprise even to the side victorious. For the first time since 1872 a Republican mayor is elected. It was not a partisan triumph but the result of combined action of all opposed to the present incumbents. The following are the successful candidates.

For Mayor—Col. Fred P. Wright, Rep.

For Controller—J. J. McCardy, Rep.

For Treasurer—Conrad W. Miller, Rep.

For the Assembly—Wolterstoff, Rep.; Sandell, Rep.; Daly, Rep.; Horr, Rep.; Lightner, Rep.; Reardon, Rep.; Johnson, Rep.

Of the eleven ward aldermen the Democrats positively have elected Conley in the Third, Cullen in the Fourth, Dornbien in the Fifth, and possibly Warren in the Eighth and Dobner in the Tenth. Ald. Bott goes down, badly swamped by Zimmerman. Ald. Melady was defeated by the Independent candidate, Adam Hein, while Mr. Petsch performed the same service for Ald. Gehan in the Ninth. In both of these wards the Democratic divisions helped in the rout.

Wright's majority over Smith is about 2,000.

ALL day of the 3rd a most destructive storm raged in Kansas and Oklahoma. The storm in Shawnee county, Oklahoma, killed a farmer, James Mitchell, and wounded three members of the family of Joseph Help, the latter being fatally wounded. For three miles along Mission creek not a house was left standing.

A MOST shocking murder was perpetrated in Chicago the 3d. When Michael Walsh, a teamster for J. V. Farwell & Co., returned home in the evening he found the house locked. An entrance was forced and in a bedroom the dead body of his wife was found. Sixty-five gashes, varying in length from half an inch to foot, told the story of a death that had come only after a violent struggle, as was shown by the disarrangement of furniture and the spattering of blood. In the left breast, immediately over the heart, was a pair of long-bladed scissors that had been jabbed into the flesh.

NEARLY a thousand workmen employed in the quarries in and near Stony Creek, Conn., are on a strike for an increase of pay.

A MONSTER SENTENCED.

Deeming, the Cold Blooded Murderer of Women and Children, Found Guilty and Sentenced.

MELBOURNE, May 3.—Frederick Bailey Deeming was on Monday found guilty by the jury which tried him for the murder of his wife at Windsor. The jury in addition to the verdict proper stated that it did not consider the prisoner insane. After the evidence was all in Deeming's counsel appealed to the jury to give the prisoner the benefit of any doubt that they might entertain as to his sanity. The crown counsel contended that there was not a particle of evidence of the insanity of the prisoner, and he said that the jury ought to dismiss all such nonsense from their minds.

DEEMING.

At this point Deeming interrupted the crown counsel. It was not the law, he said, but the press, that was trying him. If he could bring himself to believe that he committed murder he would plead guilty rather than submit to the gaze of the people in the court—the ugliest race he had ever seen. Some of the witnesses against him had deliberately lied. Whatever he could say would be disbelieved. His witnesses had been kept out of the way. People had sworn to seeing him whom he had never seen in his life. No time had been allowed him to communicate with his witnesses in England and India. It was not pleasant to confess to disease, mental or other, but he had determined to do so in justice to himself and the community. For weeks together he had suffered lapses of memory. In his own mind he was not guilty. As long as Emily Mather had been his wife he had dealt with her as gently and as affectionately as it was possible for any man to do. The prisoner, continuing his remarks, said:

"I remember no incident which would lead to this awful crime with which I am charged. I know that the people of Melbourne are so infuriated against me that they would lynch me if they had a chance. That, however, would not settle the question of my guilt or innocence. The statement that the body found in this city was that of Emily Mather is a lie. The newspapers have ruined my life forever. If I were free to-night I would drown myself. I have fought the blacks on the Zambesi and have encountered lions single-handed. I do not fear death. I do not expect justice from the judge, the jury or the public. Instead of the trial being postponed so as to enable my counsel to collect evidence showing my innocence of the horrible crime for which I am being tried for my life, it was fixed to occur when the public was enraged against me."

Deeming minutely criticised the evidence and declared that a verdict of guilty would be the greatest relief to him. He said that his use of assumed names was a fad with him.

After the verdict was announced Deeming asked the judge to refrain from the usual exhortation. The judge complied with the prisoner's wish, and simply announced the sentence of death. Deeming composedly replied: "Thank you."

The evidence which has come to light since the discovery of the murder of Deeming's last wife, for which he has just been sentenced to death, proves him to be the most cold-blooded monster of modern times. The murder, which took place in a small house in Windsor, one of the suburbs of Melbourne, was discovered through an effort to let the house to another tenant. It had been vacant for about two months and on entering the kitchen the landlord and the lady to whom he was showing the house noticed a terrible stench. Further examination led to the calling in of the police and the removal of the hearthstone. There the body was found under a freshly laid cement floor, in front of the kitchen fireplace. The skull was fractured, the face was beaten in, the head nearly severed from the body, and the body was doubled up and pressed down, so as to make it fit in the small space.

Deeming was arrested in western Australia, and soon after it developed that within a few days of the murder he had proposed marriage to a young girl whom he had met on the coasting steamer which runs from the chief ports of the eastern colonies round to King George's sound and Freemantle on the western coast. The evidence of this girl, the letter from the murderer and the presents he offered her proved important links in the chain of evidence against him and showed that long immunity had made him reckless.

The discovery of the murder at Windsor was cabled to England and investigation led to further startling discoveries. From Mrs. Mather, mother of the murdered woman, facts were learned which enabled the police to unearth a long series of most atrocious crimes. One day last July a man who gave his name as A. O. Williams arrived at Rainhill, a village about 9 miles from Liverpool, and put up at a local hostelry, the Commercial hotel, describing himself as an inspector. He rented Dinham villa from a Mrs. Mather, who kept a stationer's shop in the village, and who acted as agent for the owner. During the negotiations he became acquainted with Miss Mather, and, after a brief courtship, he married her last September. A few days after Williams' arrival in Rainhill he was visited on one or two occasions by a strange woman, accompanied by several children. The woman and children suddenly disappeared, and Williams accounted for this by saying that the woman was his sister and that she had gone to join her husband in Port Said. After the wedding Williams and his bride left for London, on their way to Australia. Letters were regularly received by Mrs. Mather describing their journey and saying that they were very happy. Soon the letters ceased, and then came a cablegram announcing the discovery of Mrs. William's body in Melbourne.

The peculiar atrocity of these murders suggested to many the theory that Deeming was "Jack the Ripper," and he soon backed it up by a "confession." From the first, however, the Scotland Yard authorities scouted the idea. The theory was founded on plausible statements about alleged mysterious disappearances from Rainhill on dates corresponding to the ripper murders, on Deeming's personal appearance and on the supposed resemblance of his handwriting to that on the postal cards signed "Jack the Ripper" and received in Scotland Yard. Subjected, however, to the severer test of comparison with Deeming's known movements, his presence in English jails and in South Africa at certain dates, the theory fell to pieces. Deeming and his counsel encouraged the idea that he was the Whitechapel fiend in order to sustain the theory of uncontrollable homicidal mania.

THREE KILLED.

Trainmen Lose Their Lives in a Wreck Near Michigan City, Ind.

MICHIGAN CITY, May 3. —A bad wreck on the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago road occurred at Otis, Ind., 7 miles south of here, at 12:30 a. m., Monday resulting in the death of the following of the train crew: Engineer J. C. Murray, Fireman James Brown and Brakeman Elmer H. Brown.

Engine 27, going from Monon to Michigan City, with a heavy train of freight cars, dashed through the trestle into the swollen mill stream beneath. Several miles above the bridge is a dam which gave way shortly before midnight and tearing along bore with it a large sawmill. It is supposed that the mill struck the trestle just as the loaded cars were on it. The bridge is a new one and made of oak and iron. The curve in the road and the darkness, together with the downpour of rain, made it impossible for the engineer to notice the washout and the engine and twelve cars went over, bearing with them the trainmen who were killed. The cars were loaded with pig iron and coal and crushed down upon the engine, which was buried in water.

KILLED BY A THUNDERBOLT.

Alexander Melton Stricken Down and His Wife Paralyzed at Their Door.

LINCOLN, Ill., May 3.—A remarkable and deadly bolt of lightning struck the home of Alexander Melton Monday in West Lincoln, killing Melton, injuring his wife so that she will die, and shocking Mrs. Perkins, sister of Mrs. Melton and her husband. Isaac Perkins and Mr. and Mrs. Melton were standing in an open doorway, Mrs. Melton's right arm resting on her husband's shoulder, his left arm around her waist. The bolt descended down the brick, knocked the plastering off the walls, scattered in four directions, and made apertures as large as a cannon ball would. Melton, was burned from head to feet. His clothes were on fire when help reached him. Mrs. Melton is paralyzed on the right side, and her agony is awful to behold. Her death is momentarily expected. This is the worst destruction of life and property ever reported in Logan county.

A VERY FAIR QUESTION.

There Are Times the Humblest Spirits Ought to Kick.

"I was in the mountain regions of West Virginia not very long ago, remarked the drummer at the Cadillac to the usual crowd, "and one day as I drove along in my buckboard I overtook a man in front and asked him to get in with me. He did it without coaxing and I began to question him.

"You live here, I suppose?" I said for a starter.

"Yes, an' hev fer ten ye'r," he replied, rather sharply, I thought.

"Are you a farmer?"

"Kind of a one. That is, my wife tends to the place, an' raises enough fer us to live on, but I mostly preaches."

"Oh," I said, with increased respect, "you are a local preacher. It's a noble calling, sir."

"P'r'aps," he answered curtly, "an' p'r'aps not. It don't pay much."

"No?" I queried negatively.

"No, tain't a gold mine, I reckon."

"Of course not, but it is a labor of love, and your reward comes after a while."

"That's what they been tellin' me round these parts, but a man's got to live some how. I preached last night at the Lick Run meeting house, and I took up a collection of twenty-four cents. Sunday over on Hurricane I got thirty-two cents and footed it eight miles thar and back and had a cold dinner. I ain't never averidged more'n seventeen dollars a ye'r in the whole ten ye'r, but I never raised my voice agin hit till now."

"And why now?" I asked.

"Because they're going to cut my salary down: say I'm gittin' stuck up an' proud an' wear store clo's, and I need tamin.' Hold up," he exclaimed, as we came to a path leading off the road, "I've got to git out here, an I'm much obleeged to you fer givin' me a lift, but before I go I'd like to ax you as a f'ar minded man ef you don't think cuttin' my salary under existin' conditions ain't a lettle like wallupin' the gospel into the mud?"

I assured him I thought it was, and with a hearty shake of my hand, he hurried away down the path and I went on my way pondering.—Detroit Free Press.

HIS GREAT SCHEME.

He Makes an Appointment With Himself and Keeps It.

He pondered deeply on the subject and the more he pondered the more puzzled he seemed to be, until a happy thought struck him.

His smile was one of triumph as he drew his chair up to his desk, hastily scribbled a note, marked it. "Deliver promptly at seven thirty p. m.," and then called a messenger.

"Do not deliver this until the time given," he cautioned the messenger.

Then he went back to his work with a mind free from care.

At seven thirty o'clock that evening he was at home in his easy chair reading a newspaper when the door-bell rang.

"A message for you, sir," said the servant.

"For me!" he exclaimed in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

He hastily glanced it over, dropped it, and started for his coat.

"Promised to meet Shillaber of Keokuk at the Tremont House at eight o'clock," he explained to his wife. "I had forgotten all about it."

She picked up the note after he had gone. It read as follows:

Charles L. Billings, Esq.—Dear Sir: Do not forget your engagement with Shillaber at the Tremont House at 8 o'clock.

Very truly,
CHARLES L. BILLINGS.

"Wonderful memory!" mused his wife. "I wonder if he had to write a note to himself to keep from forgetting the hour of our wedding."—Chicago Tribune.

IN A SUMMER GONE BY.

That a youth of the patriot army once wore;
And a broken old spinning-wheel under it stands,
That once whirled 'neath a patriot maiden's fair hands.
The sword has grown dull with the wear of the years,
And a cobweb alone on the spindle appears;
But the blade it was blue and the wheel it was spry,
When Washington fought in a summer gone by.

Sweet Betty sat turning the wheel in the sun,
In a sad-colored gown, as demure as a nun,
When Hiram came in at the white wicket-gate
By the lavender-bed, to discover his fate.
She looked at the sky and she blushed rosy red,
And she stooped for a sprig from the lavender-bed;
For she knew very well by the light in his eye,
Young Hiram came wooing the summer gone by.

He spoke of the cot in the woodland's embrace,
With windows that waited to frame her sweet face
In a temple of roses, and where to the end
Their lives and their pleasures would peacefully blend.
But swiftly she turned with her cheeks in a flame:
"Why speak ye of peace or of pleasure—for shame!
While others go forth for our country to die!"
Said the patriot maid in that summer gone by.

"There is bloodshed and famine abroad in the land;
Go get you a sword and troop to command.
'Tis a year since the congress proclaimed we were free;
Go fight for the rose girdled cottage—and me!"
He went, with a sob swelling up in his throat,
And the lavender-sprig she had dropped in his coat;
And she watched him from sight with a smile and a sigh,
'Mid the roses and pinks of the summer gone by.

No message, no letter, and deep lay the snow.
"It will come, though," she said, "when the crocuses blow."
No letter, no message, and sunshine and rains
Had summoned the roses to hedges and lanes.
She sat at her wheel with the tears dropping down,
And a lavender-sprig in the breast of her gown.
When they told her how bravely a soldier could die,
And brought her his sword in a summer gone by.

And laid her pale lips in a kiss to the blade;
"I gave thee my dearest, my country!" she said,
"And I die for his sake!" and she suddenly pressed
The bloodthirsty blade to her beautiful breast.
Green lieth her grave on the hillside afar;
Above it each night hangs a luminous star;
And the lavender grew in the garden-bed nigh,
As it grew in the dew of a summer gone by.

THE ORACLE.

A Somber Prophecy and How It Was Verified.

I have never believed much in fortune-telling, or palmistry, or anything of that kind; but when my two dear cousins, Amy and Dolly, who were devout believers, urged me to go with them to Fatima—Fatima was the last new prophetess—I could not refuse them. I felt that they, or one of them, had a right to know what there was to be known about my future, because I was going to marry one of them.

Both were delightful girls—Amy a lovely blonde, Dolly a sparkling brunette. Each had fifty thousand dollars, and each, I think I may say, was quite ready to marry me. I only hesitated between them because I could not bear to gratify one at the expense of the other; and, in spite of their amiability, I had seen unmistakable signs of a little rivalry between them.

We went all together to Fatima's, and I took my stand before her, exactly equi-distant from a cousin on either hand—I was not going to give Fatima a lead if I could help it. The prophetess was a plain woman of about thirty, and she looked rather sour when I insisted on both the young ladies being present. However, she went to work and droned out some details of my past life, giving special attention to my smoking habits—I knew I smelled of cigars—and my debts; which latter information she might just as well have kept to herself. At last she could not shirk the question of my matrimonial future any longer. She cast puzzled glances, first at Amy, then at Dolly—both were looking at me with sweet affection. She turned to me; I gently took a hand of each and pressed it affectionately. Fatima sighed and gave it up.

"You are loved," she said in a deep tone, "by two beautiful women (the girls looked pleased); one is fair (Amy blushed), the other is dark (Dolly colored). You love both in a measure (I pressed the two hands), and" — Fatima paused.

"Well, which is it to be?" I asked.

She bent over my hand. "I see a double line, once broken. I see a wedding, and a death, and a wedding; and the time for all this is short. You will wed one; but let the other endure; the joy of the one will be destroyed with her life in a little space, and the other shall be satisfied. I have spoken. The charge is one dollar."

"But stop," I cried. "Which is to marry me first?"

"The lines say naught as to that. One you will marry, and she must die; and the other follows."

"But hang it! is there no way out of this?"

She knitted her brows and looked again. "Aye, if you will; but that way lies a red hand—a hand dyed as though in blood. Ah, 'tis a woman causes it!"

The girls shivered, and I hastily flung down the dollar and went out, considerably impressed, in spite of my skepticism, with the somber prophecy. My cousins were rather silent on the way home and met all my somewhat forced attempts at making fun of Fatima with coldness; both were distant in their manner to me and not over-cordial to one another. I daresay this behavior was natural enough, for, if Fatima spoke true, one of them was doomed to early death, leaving her rival triumphant; and this doom was only to be averted if I committed a murder. Was I to murder one of them? Horrid thought!

Before many days were over I wished heartily that we had never been to Fatima's. No more pleasant talks tete-a-tete, now with Amy, now with Dolly! They both avoided me sedulously. On the other hand they began to show almost exaggerated affection for one another; they were never apart, and treated one another with the most loving, almost anxious friendship. In fact, I should have found my stay in the house very dull had not Mrs. Girdlestone, a pretty little widow with great hazel eyes and a mass of auburn curls, consoled me a little.

I was smoking in the study one morning, when I heard them talking in the veranda outside.

"My darling," Amy was saying, "why think any more of such nonsense? I know you love him. Accept my willing, willing sacrifice, and be happy with him; he loves you."

"My sweet Dolly, you are too, too generous. I think Fatima's story all nonsense, and, just for that reason, I cannot, will not, purchase happiness at the cost of your misery. I resign him—but what do I say? It is you he loves."

"I'm sure it's you, Dolly," resumed Amy. "He's always looking at you. I wouldn't say so if I didn't believe it; and how you can pay any attention to that stuff, I don't know."

"You're quite wrong, Amy. He all but told me it was you. It's absurd of you to pretend not to know it."

Something followed I did not hear; then the tone of the voices changed, and Amy said, with the sound of a choked sob:

"You're a horrid girl; you want me to die, and then you'll marry B-B-Bob."

"I thought you loved me," sobbed Dolly, in reply; "and now you're planning my death. I hate you, Amy."

Lunch was a somber meal that day. The girls would speak neither to me nor to one another; only Mrs. Girdlestone tried to keep up the conversation. It was just as bad all day; they snapped at one another and they snapped at the little widow, and, worst of all, they snapped at me until really the horrid thought that had struck me before would have seemed less horrid if only I could have relied on the efficiency of the bloodhounds of justice; but the police happened to arrest a murderer about then—he walked into the station, and that stayed my fell imaginings. Besides, I should not have known which to murder any more than I had known which to marry.

In very low spirits, I started on a solitary walk next afternoon, thinking I would come to a definite conclusion. I arrived at no such thing. I knew they would both refuse me as matters stood, and, although justly incensed, I knew I should not have the nerve to take the alternative fate offered. The rain came down, and I turned to go home. To my surprise, I met Mrs. Girdlestone.

"Why have you ventured out such a day as this?"

"Oh, I had some shopping to do."

"Could not I have done it for you?"

"Indeed, no," she answered, with a laugh and a blush.

"Or one of the servants?"

"No; servants chatter so."

"It's a secret, then?"

"Well, yes, it is—from you, anyhow, Mr. Thompson."

"Did you get what you wanted?"

"Yes; I have it here."

I noticed she was carrying a fair-sized parcel wrapped in tissue paper.

"Oh, let me take it for you?"

"Will you be very careful? I don't know what I should do if it came to grief."

I promised to guard it like my life, and we walked on. Presently the rain stopped, the sun came out, and we lengthened our walk. She was very kind and sympathetic, and at last I told her the whole story. Nothing could be nicer than the way she spoke, and I became quite engrossed in our conversation. It lasted up to the very door, and we paused in front of the house, while she stopped to say a last word, pressing my hand and telling me "how grieved, how very —"

At this point a butcher-boy came along, carrying a basket. The boy ran against Mrs. Girdlestone's parcel. There was a sound of breaking glass. I dropped the thing, but not before my hand was covered with blood—as I thought.

"Oh, oh, oh!" I cried; "my hand's cut to bits."

The widow looked at it.

"I must stanch the blood!" I cried.

"Nonsense, Mr. Thompson. It's not blood; it's—it's—well, it's my hair-wash!" and she blushed very becomingly.

"Hair-wash!"

"Yes," she murmured; "my hair is—"

"Woman, don't hesitate at such a moment!"

"Well, pale red; and that dries a lovely auburn."

Her hair might have been blue for all I cared. She was a charming woman, and had rescued me from a fearful temptation and one of my cousins from an early death. I proposed to her on the spot.

Then I went in and told my cousins. They leaped up and rushed into one another's arms, exclaiming, in furious tones: "The old cat!"

We were married in a month. I have no word to say against my wife; only it is a fact that she had nothing but one thousand dollars a year, which ceased on re-marriage. Each of the girls had, as I said, fifty thousand dollars.

So my visit to Fatima cost me exactly fifty thousand and one dollars.

I think the law should be impartially administered, and all such persons put in prison.—St. James' Gazette.

FUNNY BLUNDERS.

Some Ludicrous Examples of Misapplied Speech.

Peculiarities of speech are sectional, and, combined, they produce a dialect which is distinctively southern, or western, or New England, as the case may be. Who would doubt that a Yankee of Yankees made this speech:

"I don't s'pose there ain't nobody seen nothin' of no old felt hat nowhere?"

The redundancy of negatives alone would betray origin, the asking and answering a question in the same breath, and the familiar "I don't s'pose," which in the west would be changed to "I don't guess," and in the south, "I don't reckon."

There is something picturesque in the brevity and construction of the sentences, too, consistent with the surroundings. Take a specimen in a half-grown lad, scantily dressed, lounging up to a farm house and asking with the slow drawl of his kind:

"I don't s'pose you don't know of nobody that don't want to hire nobody to do nothin'?"

Then there is the peculiar misapplication of remembered words, which thrust themselves into conversation as "misfits" with ludicrous effect. We all know what terror strikes the rural breast at sight of one of those missives of hasty news, the telegram. An old lady said with some excitement:

"There must have something terrible happened over at Pike's Corners, for I see a boy on a cyclopedia a riding over there with a dispatch."—Detroit Free Press.

—The Editor—"Lucky man, that fellow Jones." The Assistant—"I don't see how you make it." The Editor—"Why, he took out a life insurance policy for five hundred dollars and died six days before the company failed."

THE SARATOGA MIRACLE

Further Investigated by an Express Reporter.

The Facts Already Stated Fully Confirmed —Interviews with Leading Physicians Who Treated Quant—The Most Marvelous Case in the History of Medical Science.

A few weeks ago an article appeared in this paper copied from the Albany, N. Y., Journal, giving the particulars of one of the most remarkable cures of the 19th century. The article was under the heading "A Saratoga Co. Miracle," and excited such widespread comment that another Albany paper —the Express—detailed a reporter to make a thorough investigation of the statements appearing in the Journal's article. The facts as elicited by the Express reporter are given in the following article, which appeared in that paper on April 16th, and makes one of the most interesting stories ever related:—

A few weeks ago there was published in the Albany Evening Journal the story of a most remarkable—indeed so remarkable as to well justify the term "miraculous"—cure of a severe case of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis; simply by the use of Pink Pills for Pale People, and, in compliance with instructions, an Express reporter has been devoting some time in a critical investigation of the real facts of the case.

The story of the wonderful cure of Charles A. Quant of Galway, Saratoga county, N. Y., as first told in "The Journal," has been copied into hundreds if not thousands of other daily and weekly newspapers and has created such a sensation throughout the entire country that it was deemed a duty due all the people and especially the thousands of similarly afflicted, that the statements of the case as made in "The Albany Journal" and copied into so many other newspapers should, if true, be verified; or, if false, exposed as an imposition upon public credulity.

The result of the Express reporter's investigations authorizes him in saying that the story of Charles A. Quant's cure of locomotor ataxia by the use of Pink Pills for Pale People, a popular remedy prepared and put up by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Morristown, N. Y., and Brockville, Ontario, IS TRUE, and that all its statements are not only justified but verified by the fuller development of the further facts of the case.

Perhaps the readers of the Express are not all of them fully familiar with the details of this miraculous restoration to health of a man who after weeks and months of treatment by the most skillful doctors in two of the best hospitals in the state of New York—the Roosevelt hospital in New York city and St. Peter's hospital in Albany—was dismissed from each as incurable and, because the case was deemed incurable, the man was denied admission into several others to which application was made in his behalf. The story as told by Mr. Quant himself and published in the Albany Journal, is as follows:—

"My name is Charles A. Quant. I am 37 years old. I was born in the village of Galway and excepting while traveling on business and a little while in Amsterdam, have spent my whole life here. Up to about eight years ago I had never been sick and was then in perfect health. I was fully six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds and was very strong. For 12 years I was traveling salesman for a piano and organ company, and had to do, or at least did do, a great deal of heavy lifting, got my meals very irregularly and slept in enough 'spare beds' in country houses to freeze any ordinary man to death, or at least give him the rheumatism. About eight years ago I began to feel distress in my stomach, and consulted several doctors about it. They all said it was dyspepsia, and for dyspepsia I was treated by various doctors in different places, and took all the patent medicines I could hear of that claimed to be a cure for dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began to have pain in my back and legs and became conscious that my legs were getting weak and my step unsteady, and then I staggered when I walked. Having received no benefit from the use of patent medicines, and feeling that I was constantly growing worse, I then, upon advice, began the use of electric belts, pads and all the many different kinds of electric appliances I could hear of, and spent hundreds of dollars for them, but they did me no good. (Here Mr. Quant showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of underwear, for which he paid $[illegible]24). In the fall of 1888 the doctors advised a change of climate, so I went to Atlanta, Ga., and acted as agent for the Estey Organ Company. While there I took a thorough electric treatment, but it only seemed to aggravate my disease, and the only relief I could get from the sharp and distressing pains was to take morphine. The pain was so intense at times that it seemed as though I could not stand it, and I almost longed for death as the only certain relief. In September of 1888 my legs gave out entirely and my left eye was drawn to one side, so that I had double sight and was dizzy. My trouble so affected my whole nervous system that I had to give up business. Then I returned to New York and went to the Roosevelt hospital, where for four months I was treated by specialists and they pronounced my case locomotor ataxia and incurable. After I had been under treatment by Prof. Starr and Dr. Ware for four months, they told me they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York hospital on Fifteenth street, where, upon examination, they said I was incurable and would not take me in. At the Presbyterian hospital they examined me and told me the same thing. In March, 1890, I was taken to St. Peter's hospital in Albany, where Prof. H. H. Hun frankly told my wife my case was hopeless; that he could do nothing for me and that she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's famous skill and I remained under his treatment for nine weeks, but secured no benefit. All this time I had been growing worse. I had become entirely paralyzed from my waist down and had partly lost control of my hands. The pain was terrible; my legs felt as though they were freezing and my stomach would not retain food, and I fell away to 120 pounds. In the Albany hospital they put 17 big burns on my back one day with red hot irons and after a few days they put 14 more burns on and treated me with electricity, but I got worse rather than better; lost control of my bowels and water, and, upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought home, where it was thought that death would soon come to relieve me of my sufferings. Last September, while in this helpless and suffering condition, a friend of mine in Hamilton, Ont., called my attention to the statement of one John Marshall, whose case had been similar to my own, and who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. In this case Mr. Marshall, who is a prominent member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, had, after four years of constant treatment by the most eminent Canadian physicians, been pronounced incurable, and paid the $1,000 total disability claim allowed by the order in such cases. Some months after Mr. Marshall began a course of treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking some 15 boxes was fully restored to health. I thought I would try them, and my wife sent for two boxes of the pills, and I took them according to the directions on the wrapper on each box. For the first few days the cold baths were pretty severe as I was so very weak, but I continued to follow instructions as to taking the pills and the treatment, and even before I had used up the two boxes of the pills I began to feel beneficial results from them. My pains were not so bad. I felt warmer; my head felt better; my food began to relish and agree with me; I could straighten up; the feeling began to come back into my limbs; I began to be able to get about on crutches; my eye came back again as good as ever, and now, after the use of eight boxes of the pills, at a cost of only $4.00—see!—I can with the help of a cane only, walk all about the house and yard, can saw wood, and on pleasant days I walk down town. My stomach trouble is gone; I have gained ten pounds; I feel like a new man, and when the spring opens I expect to be able to renew my organ and piano agency. I cannot speak in too high terms of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, as I know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as incurable."

Such is the wonderful story which the Express reporter has succeeded in securing verification of in all its details, from the hospital records where Mr. Quant was treated and from the doctors who had the case in hand and who pronounced him incurable. Let it be remembered that all this hospital treatment was two and three years ago, while his cure, by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, has been effected since last September, 1891. So it is beyond a doubt evident that his recovery is wholly due to the use of these famous pills which have been found to have made such remarkable cures in this and other cases.

Mr Quant placed in the hands of the reporter his card of admission to Roosevelt hospital, which is here reproduced in further confirmation of his statements:

To verify Mr. Quant's statement our reporter a few days ago, (March 31st, 1892,) called on Dr. Allen Starr at his office, No. 22 West Twenty-eighth street, New York city. Dr. Starr is house physician of the Roosevelt hospital, situated corner of Ninth avenue and Fifty-ninth street. In reply to inquiry he said he remembered the case of Mr. Quant very well and treated him some but that he was chiefly treated and under the more especial care of Dr. Ware. He said he regarded this case as he did all cases of locomotor ataxia as incurable. In order that our reporter might get a copy of the history of the case of Mr. Quant from the hospital record he very courteously gave him a letter of which the following is a copy:—

Dr. M. A. Starr, 22 West Forty-eighth street, office hours, 9 to 12 a. m., New York, March 31st, 1892.—Dear Dr. Vought: If you have any record of a locomotor ataxia by name of Quant, who says he came to the clinic three or four years ago, No. 14,037, of the O. D Dept., Roosevelt, sent to me from Ware, will you let the bearer know. If you have no record send him to Roosevelt Hosp.

Yours, STARR.

By means of this leiter access to the records was permitted and a transcript of the history of Mr. Quant's case made from them as follows:—

"No. 14,037. Admitted September 16th, 1889, Charles A. Quant, aged 34 years. Born U. S. Married. Hoboken."

"History of the case:—Dyspepsia for past four or five years. About 14 months partial loss of power and numbness in lower extremities. Girdling sensation about abdomen. (November 29th, 1889, not improved, external strobismus of left eye and dilation of the left eye.) Some difficulty in passing water at times; no headache but some dizziness; alternate diarrhoea and constipation; partial ptosis past two weeks in left eye.

"Ord R. F. Bi pep. and soda."

These are the marked symptoms of a severe case of locomotor ataxia. "And Dr. Starr said a case with such marked symptoms could not be cured and Quant who was receiving treatment in the out patient department, was given up as incurable."

"There never was a case recovered in the world," said Dr. Starr. And then said: "Dr. Ware can tell you more about the case as Quant was under his more personal treatment. I am surprised," he said, "that the man is alive, as I thought he must be dead long ago."

Our reporter found Dr. Edward Ware at his office, No. 162 West Ninety-third street, New York. He said: "I have very distinct recollections of the Quant case. It was a very pronounced case. I treated him about eight months. This was in the early summer of 1890. I deemed him incurable, and thought him dead before now. Imagine my surprise when I received a letter from him about two weeks ago telling me that he was alive, was getting well and expected soon to be fully recovered."

"What do you think, doctor, was the cause of his recovery?"

"That is more than I know. Quant says he has been taking some sort of pills and that they have cured him. At all events, I am glad the poor fellow is getting well, for his was a bad case and he was a great sufferer."

Dr. Theodore R. Tuttle, No. 319 West Eighteenth street, to whom our reporter is indebted for assisting courtesies, said of locomotor ataxia: "I have had several cases of this disease in the course of my practice. I will not say that it is incurable, but I never knew of a case to get well; but I will say it is not deemed curable by any remedies known to the medical profession."

After this successful and confirmatory investigation in New York, our reporter, Saturday April 2nd, 1892, visited St. Peter's hospital, in Albany, corner of Albany and Ferry streets. He had a courteous reception by Sister Mary Philomena, the sister superior of St. Peter's hospital, and when told the object of his visit, said she remembered the case of poor Mr. Quant very distinctly. Said she: "It was a very distressing case and excited my sympathies much. Poor fellow he couldn't be cured and had to go home in a terrible condition of helplessness and suffering." The house physician, on consulting the records of St. Peter's hospital, said he found only that Charles A. Quant entered the hospital March 14th, 1890, was treated by Dr. Henry Hun, assisted by Dr. Van Derveer, who was then, 1890, at the head of the hospital, and that his case being deemed not possible of cure, he left the hospital and was taken to his home, as he supposed to die.

Such is the full history of this most remarkable case of successful recovery from a heretofore supposed incurable disease, and after all the doctors had given him up, by the simple use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Truly it is an interesting story of a most miraculous cure of a dreadful disease by the simple use of this popular remedy.

A further investigation revealed the fact that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is usually understood, but are a scientific preparation successfully used in general practice for many years before being offered to the public generally. They contain in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature.

On further inquiry the writer found that these pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ontario, and Morristown, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, from either address. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

Which Will You Do?

Which will you do, smile and make others happy, or be crabbed and make everybody around you miserable? You can live among flowers and singing birds, or in the mire surrounded by fogs and frogs. The amount of happiness which you can produce is incalculable, if you will only show a smiling face, a kind heart, and speak pleasant words. On the other hand, by sour looks, cross words and a fretful disposition you can make hundreds unhappy almost beyond endurance. Which will you do? Wear a pleasant countenance, let joy beam in your eye, and love grow on your forehead. There is no joy so great as that which springs from a kind act or pleasant deed, and you may feel it at night when you rest, and at morning when you rise, throughout the day when about your daily business.

Great Prospects.

Cora—Yes, but he'll be rich some day.

"Certainly he will. Don't you know that all things come to the man that waits."—Brooklyn Life.

THE NOTE ELEGANT.

Women Should Be Careful in Their Correspondence.

It takes a poet or a woman to condense into the few brief sentences of the conventional note the comprehensive message of congratulation or condolence, the elegant acceptance of invitation or the exquisite refusal which never offends. Some one has called women "the genius of epistolary communication" and indeed the gift of graceful letter writing is one peculiar to women, handed down from mother to daughter through the mystery of heredity. Certain regulations govern these apparently spontaneous productions, even as a Browning sonnet in all its mysticism conforms to the requirements of verse structure. In the first place, the note elegant is not written upon the convenient "correspondence card" but upon a small sheet of thick cream paper, either glazed or rough, according as the writer's taste inclines. The sheet has at the top the street and number of the lady's address in plain letters, the name of her country home, or the town in which she lives if it is so small as to be without numbered houses. The sheet is folded once and enclosed in a square envelope, and is more elegant and ceremonial if sealed with wax. As to the chirography, that which is most illegible is most stylish. If a woman can not correct her unfortunate habit of writing so that people can read it in any other way, she uses a quill pen, which generally brings about the desired result. The great feature of the stylish hand is that it has no curves, but is sharply pointed and the letters are closely crowded together. The reason why this style of writing is considered elegant is that it can not from its formation be written hastily. Any evidence of haste is considered inelegant, whether it manifests itself in a careless toilet or a careless note. The note begins on the first page, skips to the fourth, and finishes up by being written across the sheet on the inside pages. This is one of the things it is well for a man to remember, for sometimes the words of the fourth page are not read at all, as the signature is on the third and complications arise thereby.

One thing for a woman to remember is that she can never afford to write a careless note, for some one is certain to see it and judge her by it just as she is sure to meet the man for whose opinion she most cares when she goes out in her old bonnet.

The woman who wrote in her haste upon visiting card, "Come with pleasure," in answer to a dinner invitation, found the gates of society closed against her ever afterward as one too busy or too brief for civility. Abbreviations and numerals are as bad form in the note elegant as a derby hat with a dress suit.—N. Y. Sun.

DELANO DIARY.

--Fairday tomorrow.

--Secure some of Schaffer's bargains before he begins moving.

—A W. Wittman is the proprietor of a new piano and is proud of his possessions.

—Marshal, B. Riley has moved into his new house on north Second street where he is comfortably located.

—Miss Mabel Parsons has begun the summer term of school in Borke's district where she taught last winter.

--John Rogers vs. the Town of Woodland, a road case, is being investigated in Squire Billing's court this p. m.

—Repairing, painting, papering, housecleaning and like occupations are occupying the leisure hours of most of the Delano housekeepers at present.

—Very noticeable at the Public School exercises on Arbor day was the absence of every single one of the six members of the Board of Education.

—Mr. Buckman has moved into his new house on north Third street and Rev. Berggren occupies his new home lately vacated by Mr. Buckman on Fourth street.

—Call at Schaffer's and buy cheap and save him moving so many goods into his new quarters.

—Notice the change in the add of the Great Northern and the notice of reduced fares to Portland, Oregon, on account of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

—Rev. C. Mayer, who has resided in Delano for a couple of years shipped his goods and moved his family on Tuesday to Fergus Falls, where he will continue in the ministerial service as a circuit rider.

--A stranger with a very bad cough, unable to work and no money arrived in town Monday and sought aid from the village council to further him on his way to Wahpeton where he claimed to have friends.

—The Teachers' Examining Board met at the Eagle office on Saturday and organized by electing I. Gutzwiller Pres. and F. H. Lindsley Secretary. And still the Eagle says "but, as usual, failed to accomplish anything."

—E. E. Cleveland, of Maple Plain, entertained the GAZETTE force for a few minutes on Tuesday with one of his eloquent outbursts of oratory. He expresses a high opinion of the letter of Diabolis in a recent number of the GAZETTE.

—Baron Von Kruger claims not to have taken his share of the treats at expense of Ignatius Gutzwiller, Jr. won by John ball in a bet that the fireman's posters printed at the Eagle office lately were dated 1891, a year behind the times. Ig. ought to post up before he bets the beer for the crowd next time.

--Considerable manure has been hauled during the past week to farms near town where it will abundantly repay the provident hasbandman for his trouble. There still remains quite a number of loads which will have to be removed by the village authorities within a few days at the expense of the property owners.

—Numerous complaints arise as to the irregularity with which mail is received in our village. That noble bird the Eagle pretending to pounce down upon all derelicts from duty don't seem inclined to mention the matter so frequently as was her wont before the last change of administration. Wake up old bird and let the public know how you get your mail now-a-days.

—A. E. Markham's comedians "yumped da yob" on Monday evening and did not appear in the City Hall as billed on account of some trouble about the hall rent and license business which Mayor Coolen did not seem to see in the same light as the manager of the company. The audience which assembled on the streets were treated to a free Farce-Comedy, but not "Ole Olson's Troubles."

—At a meeting of the M. E. Sunday School Board at the church on Thursday evening officers were elected as follows:

Superintendent, Miss Irene Cheeley; assistant, Miss Julia Cunningham; 2nd assistant, Dr. Catlin; Secretary, Miss Anna Quinn; treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Green; librarian, Emery Cunningham; organist, Mrs. Leon Frazee; assistant, Miss Alice Murphy.

—Call on Schaffer with your cash and get one of those handsome pictures for your home.

—Some of our correspondents were crowded out this week.

—See Green's Elastic Starch. Best in the world, only 10 cts. 28 3t.

—Perry Ball is said to have killed two young wolves this week near the Pine Tree.

—Simon Weldelee and Charley Carlton are building some nice counters for George Schaffer's new store.

Ex-Mayor Schaffer will have one of the first stores in town after he moves. He is giving bargains at the old stand to save moving.

—From the St. Bonifacius items in the Weekly Valley Herald we learn that Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Stewart spent Sunday with Mrs. S's folks near Delano, also Mr. and Mrs. Cramer, of Delano, spent Sunday with Mr. Hegerle and family.

—One day this week James Jinkins of Independence fired two loads of fine shot into a big timber wolf, breaking his leg and then chased him across the pasture finally overtaking him when the wolf showed fight but James finished him with a club.

—Rev. J. R. Davies has started out with a subscription list on the latest improved plan, that of installment, for the raising of the parsonage debt on the M. E. church. The subscriber agrees to pay $1. per month for six months provided there are one hundred names on the list who do the same thing which will bring in $100. per month for six months. He has met with great success so far and feels confident that he will be able to wipe out the debt this summer.

—Arbor Day was duly observed at the Delano Public School on Monday. Appropriate exercises and ceremonies were conducted by Prof. Love who opened up with a short description of the pleasures and benefits to be derived from the keeping of the day as designated by the Governor. He said trees would be living monuments of the observance of the day. Essays and selections were read by Misses. Etta Parsons, Erma Wilder and Mattie Cooper. Mottoes recited by Alva and John Catlin; reading by Misses Grace O'Hair and Mabel Quinn; a song by Mrs. Lindsley's room; reading, Estella Moody; motto, Fay Parslow, Otto Marr and Viola Cunningham; "Historic Trees" was read by Joseph Kuchenmeister; George Kurtz and Misses Della Briley and Estella Davis gave readings. Twenty of Mrs. Lindsley's scholars gave mottoes in succession. Miss Mollie Maxfield spoke "Sowing the Seed"; song by Miss O'Leary's and Miss Cheeley's scholars; reading by Mrs Lindsley; recitations by Miss O'Leary's scholars. Remarks by visitors, Dr. Catlin, Rev. J. R. Davies and Mrs. Chance came next, after which the scholars were marched to the front yard and after singing the fourth verse of America and a few appropriate remarks by Prof. Love the tree planting was proceeded with. A half holiday was enjoyed by teachers and scholars during the afternoon. Such occasions serve to break the monotony of school life and are remembered by all participants as bright spots along life's pathway.

County Cullings.

County roads were laid out by the County Commissioners in Sec. 3, Town of Buffalo; Woolley road in Victor and Monticello bridge road at their last session.

Thanks to the Howard Lake Herald for the discovery of our "mis-quotation"; we would inquire of the Herald where it finds its quotation, "those who took a drink"?

Mr. Tanner of the Waverly Tribune seems to have taken rather an unusual advantage of his correspondent Mr. Matteson when he separates his letter into paragraphs and interlards his views between them instead of giving his opponent's letter in full.

$300. was granted French Lake for a bridge across Crow river near Meeker county line. A willingness was expressed to give as high as $1500. for an iron bridge in Franklin at Wright's ford across Crow river but owing to the road across the stream having been laid out by town and not county authorities it was found not in their power to give more than $300. So nothing was granted.

The Monticello delegations are said to have conducted themselves as mute as mice before the Board of County Commissioners at its last session conversations contrasting greatly with those of the previous meeting by being carried on almost in whispers and the dignified chairman being spared the necessity of adjourning the matter before completely arranged. Their county road was laid out as they petitioned and now the District Court will pass upon the legality of the action of the Board.

The County Commissioners met at Buffalo on Tuesday. The Court House commiteee reported that the Court House had become too small for the rapidly increasing business of the county and recommended that a one story brick fireproof building be erected on the northwest corner of the Court House grounds with sufficient room for convenient keeping of records and that this building be the office of the Register of Deeds and that the Judge of Probate occupy the office now used by the Register of Deeds and that partition between the Clerk of Court's office and that now occupied by the Judge of Probate be taken out and that the Clerk of Court occupy the enlarged quarters using the safe now employed in preserving the Judge of Probate's papers, and that a new fireproof vault for the use of the County Auditor be built between the offices of the Treasurer and Auditor. This arrangement would give more room and more pleasant quarters to some of the county officials and would of course facilitate the searching of records by parties interested in public matters. Some talk was had of building on to the main building an addition but it was concluded that such an arrangement would distroy the present beauty of the building and the separate quarters for the Register of Deeds was considered best.

School Savings Banks.

"Capital and Labor" is a rallying cry of this latter part of our century—a cry that sends chilling fear into the heart of many a philantrophist and humanitarian who fears an ever widening breach between capitalist and laborer. But what is most wanted is not more capital nor even more labor, but more thrift. "The masses know how to earn better than they know how to save" The inability to get money is not so much the source of poverty and its evils, as the lack of wisdom in expending or saving. Let two young men start in life equally equipped, and receive for a number of years the same salary, their circumstances being as nearly alike as possible. At the end of ten years one will be found independent, successful and happy; the other unsuccessful, in debt and cursing his "luck", envying his friend, and ready to accept all the doctrine of the unequal distribution of wealth, and the oppression of the poor man by the rich; when in truth there has been nobody to blame but himself and his own unthrift.

What can the nation do to protect itself against these unthrifty ones, too often embryo anarchists and criminals? It were a difficult task to teach thrift to men and women ignorant of its first essentials, but there are the children with minds so plastic to receive, "but marble to retain" expressions,--to them we must turn.

School Savings Banks throughout the nation would doubtless prove one of the best methods of training the children to habits of thrift and self dependence. These are already in wide use in Europe. In France there are 23,375 School Savings Banks under patronage of the government; in Belgium 5,259, and they are in common use in Germany, Hungary, Russia, England, Switzerland and the Netherlands. Italy has 5,401 Postal Savings Banks. In this country the subject has had isolated trials ever since 1876, but gained no headway until Prof. J. H. Thiry, a French educator, who came to this country for his health, introduced the system into the public schools of Long Island City in 1855. The experiment there has been most successful, and interest had broadened in the work, until now over 200 schools in various parts of the United States have adopted the plan, nearly one fourth of these being in Pennsylvania.

The system is so simple, no trouble need be experienced in adopting it. The first thing is to interest the school authorities and teachers; school boards often take much interest in introducing the system, and teachers who have the best interests of their pupils at heart will readily see its benefits. The co-operation of a Savings Bank must also be secured and the question of who shall print the blank form and cards be decided. The bank usually assumes this cost.

Having made preparation and set a day for collecting the first savings of the pupils, their parents and the general public should be informed. This can be done by the teachers and friends of the system, in private schools, or country districts. In towns and cities it is wiser to issue a circular addressed to the patrons of the school, stating the facts of the proposed innovation and its advantages and soliciting their assistance. On the morning of collection the roll is called by the teacher, the child responding by taking the money to her. She marks the amount on a School Savings Bank card opposite the proper date, and also places the amount on the roll book to his credit. This card is always in the possession of the child and serves as a memorandum and receipt. The first deposit is made in the name of the teacher or principal but when a child has saved $1 he is given a bank book and becomes, through the school, a regular patron of the savings bank. When his deposit has reached $3 or $5 as the bank decides, it draws interest at 3 or more per cent. During vacation the child may deposit or withdraw money directly from the bank, the withdrawal requiring the signature of the parent or guardian.

A weekly card has been prepared by Prof. Thiry, who has with great care fitted and simplified the School Savings Bank system of Europe to our need. Samples of this card, with use of copyright and further information about the system can be obtained by writing to Mrs. Sara L. Oberholtzer, Norristown, Penn., who is greatly interested in furthering the work.

A SOP TO SILVER.

President Harrison Throws One in a Message to the Senate.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The President sent a message to the Senate stating that in his opinion it would not be compatible with the public interest to lay before it the correspondence concerning any steps taken toward securing an international conference concerning the free coinage or enlarged use of silver. He says he will do so at the earliest moment after definite information can be given, and he adds: "It may not be inappropriate to say here that, believing the free use of silver as a coin metal upon an agreed ratio by the great commercial nations of the world would very highly promote the prosperity of all their people, I have not and will not, let any favorable opportunity pass for the promotion of that most desirable result, or, if free international silver coinage is not presently attainable, then to secure the largest practicable use of that metal." —Minneapolis Journal.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

AND now David B. Hill claims that the 23 electors from the new states will not be eligible to vote before the new appottionment is made. Too late for this fall's election.

IN a published letter over his own name Archbishop Ireland says "The socalled Faribault plan is now formally allowed, in spite of Germans and Jesuits. The decision is 'tolerare potest,' which means canonically 'is fully allowed.'"

SOME Democrats claim that Cleveland can't carry New York and many Republicans claim that Harrison can't carry New York. The old Empire State must be going Prohibition, Alliance, Mugwump or something else if neither of the old parties can carry it. It is about time to let her go for whom she pleases and take our chances on the result.

SENATOR KYLE'S new fangled dollar don't seem to be appreciated. The scheme is to take 30 articles in general use, leading products and strike an average and make that the composite dollar. It would be as changeable as anything well could be. For instance, wheat requires 1 bushel to be worth $1. corn requires 2½ bushels to make a dollars worth; oats, 3 bus.; potatoes 4 bus; etc., etc. Thats easy, you say, anyone can figure that out, but tomorrow things have changed, perhaps the commodities are down so that it would require a bushel and a half of wheat to pay for the machine you purchased to cut your grain with at a time when 1 bushel of wheat would have paid a dollar of your debt. We don't think it will work.

Tariff Pictures.

The Democratic House wants to reduce the duty on binding twine, which has come down in price from

17 cents a pound

in 1878 to 7.5 cents a pound

in 1891. Any sensible farmer can see that a duty which increases production and reduces prices is a good duty for the consumer.—New York Press.

This Tariff Picture is a fair sample of those appearing daily in the New York Press, one of the leading Republican papers of the country, but is not a very good one for them to send to the State of Minnesota where farmers are familiar with the twine business. Where they have read Hon. Cushman K. Davis' speech in favor of free binding twine and where they are aware that the price has been reduced since the tariff was reduced, this article being one to escape the protective tariff theory of McKinley and a small crumb thrown to wheat growers to aid them in seeing the beauties of the McKinley bill. Minnesota farmers know what a time their senator had in getting this small accession to the wishes of his constituents from the advocates of protective tariff, and they all know that the price has been reduced but not in the proportion indicated in the Press' Tariff Pictures, and all know too that when the Press says, "Any sensible farmer can see that a duty which increases production and reduces prices is a good duty for the consumer," concerning binding twine it is not talking about an article on which the protective idea of McKinley has been in vogue, like it has on tin plate or cutlery or pearl buttons, but about one where the protective tariff has been reduced, mainly by the efforts of our own Senator, and all can see that like sugar, binding twine is cheaper when the tariff is lower. Congressman Hall, of Minnesota is now trying to have the remaining tariff on binding twine taken off.

Pedagogical.

A few weeks since as one of our country instructors of youth, William Kennedy, of Hamel, had a vacation he visited, as he had often done before some of his neighboring schools, this time he made his appearance at the front door of several of the stately edifices of the metropolis of his county, Minneapolis, where he was more or less cordially welcomed. After completing the rounds he wrote an account of his observations and published it in one of the city dailies, giving several warm praise but the Webster school he said did not wish to be bothered with visitors during examinations which was just what he would like to be present at. He was not slow to express his opinion concerning his treatment and was replied to at length by the principal of that place of learning in a way that to the friends of Mr. Kenndey seems uncalled for as it reflected considerably on the character of one who has been engaged in school work for years, with more than ordinary zeal, and who has become an author of no small note, on educational matters having written several articles, which, on account of merit, have received wide circulation, being copied in that hub of learning, Boston. As a teacher's stock in trade consists largely of his character, it behooves all to weigh well any charges that may be made before condemning one with whom they have acquaintance on the strength of a reply to an unfavorable mention of the way visitors are treated in schools and a charge that has been made in more instances than one of teachers throughout the country.

Teachers should do nothing to injure or break down the character or reputation of a fellow worker but seek to set examples to be emulated by others. Mr. Kelly is well known in Hennepin and the eastern part of Wright county and has friends who were sorry to learn of the estimation of character made by the principal of the Webster School, Minneapolis. He denies the imputations of of any motive but that of receiving instruction in the art and science of his chosen profession, that of school teaching.

NEW YORK, May 10.—A reporter of the World today sent a copy of Henry Watterson's statement that Grover Cleveland was preparing a letter of withdrawal, to Mr. Cleveland. The Public to Judge.

MR. EDITOR GAZETTE.—The Tribune this week puts on a long face because we turned upon it its own guns. It has flown the track of argument and turned its whole attention to whineing and throwing mud.

Well, go on. We are glad you left the whole matter to the judgment of the public; that is what we wanted all along.

We are sorry to see the Tribune deny the terms "bigot, fool and hot-headed partisan". We are not surprised to find it ashamed of them but think an honest confession would have been better. But if the Tribune did not me n that the license system is right what did it mean by the clause "concede for the sake of argument?" What does it hold to be right regarding license or no license? And if it does not mean to call us bigots, fools, etc., what does it mean when it speaks (April 7, 1892) of our "defending acts of bigotry," and of "committees of hot headed partisans," etc.?

We thank the Tribune for its "great personal respect for us but how such a logical (?) gentleman as the editor can have great respect for one who "deceives" is "invincibly ignorant" and not capable enough to be strictly morally accountable is a mystery for the natives to solve.

We have been trying to defend the spirit of our government regarding the right of voting and our own right to run away when hurt. If, in so doing, we have run into and hurt some one we are sorry that they were in the way. We hope the editor will soon have more light on the duties of citizenship.

Don't cry! If you will stick fairly to one question we will help you all we can.

Respectfully,
REV. J. R. DAVIES.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Crow River Valley.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

DELANO-1856.

Settlers coming to Delano and vicinity and accompanying incidents during the year 1856 were Luther and John Cunningham, brothers and natives of Maine, accompanied by Malcomb Anderson, also Riley Sturman, from Illinois, and Charles Conzet, a cousin of Martin Conzet, of Greenwood. He came with Riley and remainad for a time in this Crow River Valley settlement. He was a native of Switzerland and a gentleman of considerable education being able to speak several languages. Other settlers were George Robertson and family of which his sons John who died in Andersonville prison during the war of the Rebellion and James who also died at St. Louis during the same war, were members, other children were David, Mary, (now Mrs. Geo. Walker) Jane, (wife of Frank Sutton) Margaret, (wife of Malcomb Anderson) and Ellen and her husband John Bain. The Robertsons and Bains were natives of Scotland. In addition to these were James Murphy and family of which Ichabod, Samuel, John William, Louisa (married Riley Sturman 1856) and Josephine (married Calvin Stewart 1866) Murphy were members. Peter Welker and family of which Judson, Atwood, Darwin and Harvey Welker were members, also Eliza (who married a Mr. Barber) and Lina (who is now Mrs. F. H. Cooper) a sister of Mrs. Welker's, Miss Cassie Cramer accompanied them. Walter Mara came about this time. William McKinley and family of which Mrs. Albert Roberts, Mrs. John Jacobs, Mrs. Ephriam Jacobs and Mrs. Washington Rader were then members settled on Crow River at the place where McKinley's bridge was afterwards located. Samuel Spear and wife the latter being a daughter of A. W. Dorman, of Greenwood, William Harmon and wife, — Morse, J. J. Wright, Dr. C. A. Wright, Jacob Dietz, Christian Barth, now of Watertown and their families, Martin Luther, — Cadwell and family, Melville and Rue Crawshaw, brothers, Joseph Berneck, called "Dutch Joe" to distinguish him from "French Joe" the cognomen by which Joseph Matter who with his brothers Louis and Anthony settled near by coming from some province bordering on France and Germany, probably Alsace or Loraine.

The following parties were 1857 settlers: William Sturman a brother of Riley, who had proceeded him, came Feb. 14th 1857 and a few months later their father Thomas Sturman with the rest of the family came. Thomas Sturman was a brother of Samuel S. Sturman who drove the first ox team through this way to Watertown and who was known for his skill in driving among the trees, while sitting on the wagon and which, at that day, desirable attainment earned for him the name "Whoa Haw" and who settled there about that time. Other settlers were George Calladine, William Knobel, John Seibel, Conrad Marth, William Ziebarth, Fred Addickes, Theodore Jaegler, James Martin and family, of which Urias, Philip, Ephriam, William John, Jane and Mrs. Fouty and husband were members, Sam coming later. During this summer Luther Cunningham who had returned to Maine for his family returned with them and his brother John's wife and William Lewis and family and whose wife was a daughter of Luther Walter who was already here. S. P. Spence and John Sherry came about this time. Several at this time laughable occurences took place among the new comers but which when they happened were solemn enough. One was the jumping of Riley Sturman's claim in his absence, and while his brother "Bill" was looking after things, by a little old man who happened along and took peaceable possesion. William is said to have come along and picked up the intruder bodily and with his limited amount of baggage loaded them on to a boat and set them adrift on the raging Crow remarking "it would never do for Riley to come and catch him there it would be the death of him sure."

INDEPENDENCE—1856.

Maj. James Whitehead carried on merchandising for a while on his claim in section 22. During that year Elkanah R. Shaw came to Independence and settled in Section 17. He was followed by his father, Timothy D. Shaw and family early in 1857; the others of family being Thomas Shaw, Amanda (married T. S. Kerr in 1858) Lorinda (Mrs. A. Young) and Timothy M. Shaw, now of Delano. The Shaws were natives of Canada. Elkanah R. Shaw died suddenly early in 1861, having in contemplation at the time of his death, the matter of enlisting in the U. S. Army, as soon as troops should be called for with the idea of doing his part in subduing the southern Rebellion which was then making demonstrations at Fort Sumpter and assuming a general threatening attitude.

An Open Letter to Diabolus, by Miss Rose Angelica.

"Go thou enemy of all righteousness, full of all subtility and all mischief, thou child of the devil, wilt thou not cease to prevent the right ways of the Lord?"—Acts, 13-10.

How dare you insult our highness, and holiness by speaking to us the way you have? calling us your "friends". Friends indeed! Why, we have not nor did we ever have any love or friendship for you or your business. All the ground you have for supposing that we love you is this, viz: We do not deny that we love your money and your vote but your business is damnable, as you yourself acknowledge, but money is a power for good or evil; it depends upon how it is used; you use it for evil; we use it for good, hence we tax your business high. That increases our power to do good and lessens your power to do evil, and because we do this, you have the presumption to call us your friends! "For shame on you." "To hell with you", where you belong and don't you dare to mention it even in hell that we are your friends; if you do we will have you arrested for slander. Not that we expect to go there, but if we should be so unfortunate (as to get there) it will be your fault and the greater will be your damnation for that and be it known unto you, you will receive no sympathy from us, however hot it may be for you.

Now Mr. Diabolus, I think there can be no misunderstanding as to what our attitude towards you is.

O you deceitful old hypocrite, how you do quote scripture, and then twit us of not quoting it to you. Well now do tell what would be the use of quoting scripture to you, when you know just as much about it as we do? It would be like casting pearls before swine, or putting jewels into a hog's snout, besides according to your own quotation of the 22nd verse of the 5th chapter of Isaiah, there is already a "woe" pronounced upon you. No, we are not a very strong believer in the doctrine that teaches that a saloonkeeper can be converted. O y-e-s, we sometimes pray for your conversion but then we haven't much faith, we couldn't have after hearing you quote that other scripture, which says, "prayers and even faith without works is dead." And besides, we are not very anxious to have you converted. Do you ask why? Well, to be honest, we don't like to tell, but since you have us so closely cornered I don't know but we shall have to, but I hope you will not say much about it. I should think you might guess the reason, from what we said about the love and friendship we have for you in our introduction, for we told you plainly, that we have no love or friendship for you, all there is about you that we love is your money, and all we love that for is for the power there is in it for good. Your money helps us to elect good men to office, and that is what this country needs more than anything else that we know of. Now, if you should be converted and join a Christian church, they would not let you sell whisky and if you could not sell, you could not pay us $500. or $1000. for a licence, and we would be "short" that much and our power to do good would be weakened that much so we have about concluded that when we pray for saloon men we will not be over anxious that our prayers shall be answered but cry mightily to the Lord for the conversion of the rest of mankind, and if we get all but the saloon men saved that will be about as much as can be expected of us. You seem to think that you have hit us very hard when you fling that 33d verse of the 5th chapter of Isaiah at us which says "woe to them that justify the wicked for reward." You seem to think that that puts us in the same boat with yourself. Now there is where you make a great mistake. We do not justify you at all, we say it is wrong and you say it sows "discord, death, hell and damnation", and we say so too but you say that you will sell anyway and you do and you will, and we take your money, not that we justify you in so doing, but that we may obtain power; money if power and with it we hope to be able to elect such good temperance Republican officers as will enable us to put down the saloon. O yes, I know you say you helped us elect our candidates, and you are well satisfied with them. "Don't fool yourself", we know what we are about; just so soon as we obtain unlimited power, off goes your head, now you can "just put that in your pipe and smoke it," and get all the consolation you can out of it. Now in regard to the Prohibitionists, I rather think you are a little hard on them. I know we have said some pretty hard things about them ourselves but when it comes to saying "dam em" we think perhaps that may be going a little too far. We think that when a person is excited they may be tempted to say some things which they would not say if they would stop and think twice before they speak once. We acknowledge to a weakness in this direction ourselves. Heaven forgive! for in our more serious, sober and thoughtful moments we have more than half acknowledged to ourselves that there is some good in them, in fact the more we think about them, and the more we see of them, the more we are inclined to think there is considerable good in them, and sometimes we feel almost forced to say that they are the best, the cleanest, the purest and the most unselfish political party there is in the world and about all the objection we have to it as a political party is that it is not big enough. We are watching its growth with a great deal of interest and just as soon as it gets big enough to whip the Republicans, the Democrats and the devil we are going to join it.

And then, Mr. Diabolus, where will you be?

You may well tremble as you contemplate the answer.

From Your Implacable Enemy,
MISS ROSE ANGELICA.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, May 6, 1892.

The anti-Harrison republicans, in and out of Congress, realizing that the Mineapolis convention is only a month off, are getting more active than ever. Secretary conferences are of nightly occurence here, and they are confident of defeating Mr. Harrison. Their present policy is to encourage the friends of every possible candidate, trusting to being able at the last minute to solidify all of this scattering vote for their candidate, whoever he may be.

Speaker Crisp wishes his friends and admirers to know that he fully appreciates the honor conferred upon him by the invitations he is constantly receiving to visit different places, but as he regards it of the highest importance that he should be in the House until the day of adjournment, he is compelled to decline all invitations. It would be a pleasure to him to accept them all, but he places duty far above pleasure.

Secretary Foster, in answer to a House Resolution, has admitted that warrants and requisitions upon the Treasury amounting to $5,655,866 were presented during Feburary and "held up" until March. He pleads in extenuation "press of other business." This charge which was made by democratic members of the House and by others has been persistently denied by republicans in and out of the Treasury department. The Secretary's statement shows how much dependence can be placed upon republican denials.

The Attorney General's office has virtually been forced by the attitude of the democratic members of the House to order the U. S. district attorney at Philadelphia to begin an action against the noterious sugar trust. This was not done until the House Judiciary committee had decided to report favorably Representative Scott's resolution, calling upon the Attorney General for information as to whether the sugar trust had violated the Sherman anti-trust law, and whether any prosecution had been instituted against it, was promptly adopted by the House.

Commissioner Raum is truly unfortunate in having his veracity constantly doubted. This week Capt. Charles A. De Arnaud testified before the House investigating committee that Raum, had sworn to a falsehood concerning his application for a pension which Raum had rejected for spite. Representative Enloe is certainly not alone in his opinion of the truthfulness of Raum, although no one else has been quite as unparliamentary in their language.

The best that the House could get out of the Senate on the Chinese question was amendments to the old law providing for one year's imprisonment of every Chinaman detected violating the law; the registration of Chinese now in this country and denying them the right to bail pending the decision of cases under writs of habeas corpus; and they had to fight hard to get that much, as the republicans wished to restrict the legislation to a renewal of the old law which had proved its worthlessness in many respects. The amendments will remedy the worst defects of the old law, and if the administration chooses it can now stop Chinese immigration, either through Canada or from any other source.

Few people who have followed the evidence taken by the House committee engaged in investigating the Pension Bureau have any doubt as to what the verdict will be.

Guilty as charged, will certainly be the report of the committee which will undoubtedly recommend the dismissal of Commissioner Raum for management and general inefficiency. It is doubtful, however, wether Mr. Harrison will have backbone enough to dismiss Raum on the eve of the national campaign. Secretary Noble may find himself in danger of impeachment if he persists in his refusal to allow the committee to examine the papers relating to the dismissal of certain specsal pension examiners.

The House Commerce committee propose to look into the Reading coal trust, with a view to recommending Congressional action. The democrats in the House are not afraid of trusts, if a member of the Cabinet is one of the big stockholders in it.

HOW MANY characters has a man, anyway? Those who say "they respect so-and-so as a man but distrust him as a politician" would do well to regard this question. Is a man an integer like a billiard ball, in which a dent is a disability, or is he a thing of compartments, like a steamship, of which some may be stove in while the rest may float him into port?

AN Indiana man has invented a process for "aging" violins. He claims that in two weeks' time he can impart to any ordinary violin all the fullness and richness of tone possessed by a Stradivarius. If he has any process, says the Chicago Tribune, by which he can take a common, everyday, average fiddler and make him 275 years old he is the man for whom the world has been yearning all these weary ages.

HAIR on the face seems to be an evidence of independence and manhood in New York. Not long ago one of the fashionable clubs in that city required of all its waiters that they should be clean shaven, as only members should enjoy the adornment of a beard. And only the other day a woman refused to live with her husband and was sustained in her refusal by the courts because he could not raise a mustache. The world moves.

IT is only recently that people have been permitted to ascend the rock and signal station at Gibraltar. Since last November the British military, with their families, and persons connected with the British navy, have been permitted to visit this fine lookout. AN anti-treating league that has been formed in Philadelphia is stirring up club circles. It originated with several members of the Union League club, and inside of twenty-four hours more than a score of the members of the club joined the league. Applications for membership have poured in since from all the clubs in the city. No doubt about the earnestness of the promoters and members of the league is expressed. Its promoters say that the league gives a man new liberty, and puts him at ease everywhere. Any member found treating or accepting a treat from a fellow member will be fined.

IT has been a mystery to some people how Italy, a country without gold mines, could obtain the gold with which to pay the $50,000,000 or so a year due to foreign holders of her bonds. The mystery is explained away by Mr. Dering, secretary of the British embassy in Rome, who declares that American travelers alone spend $35,000,000 a year in gold in Italy, while other foreign travelers expend fully double that amount. This is irrespective of the money brought into the country in the form of donations to the Holy See by the 50,000 religious pilgrims who annually visit the Eternal City.

LATER.

Levees Breaking.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 10.—Yesterday morning the levee at Brook's Mill, Ark., gave away after strenuous efforts to hold it had proved futile. The break was, therefore, not unexpected. At 2 p. m., the crevasse was 350 feet in width with the water rushing through to the depth of six feet. The levee was 8 feet high. The water flows directly into Ottery bayou and thence into Bayou Maria. About 7,000 acres of Arkansas land already planted in corn and cotton is inundated, while that section of Louisiana near the Bayou Maria embraces a vast amount of lands in cultivation that will be flooded.

Early this morning the wind increased in violence, and the waves washing over the tops of the levees near Lake Providence created quite a panic among the people living behind them. The gauge this afternoon stands 41.7, .6 above the last high water, with about ten inches of levee above the liquid, though in many places sacks filled with earth are being used to keep the water from running over. Great anxiety is felt there.

DISASTER IN KANSAS.

Heavy Rains Cause the Caving-In of a Farmer's Dugout and Five of His Children Are Killed—Further Reports from Water-Soaked Districts in Various States —Farmers Greatly Discouraged.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 10.—C. H. Wilkins, a colored farmer, lived at Antoony, Kan., in a dugout, together with his wife and five children. The heavy rain of the last few days loosened the earth so that it caved in, killing all five of the children and fatally wounding Mrs. Wilkins. The husband escaped with a broken leg and sprained back.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., May 10.—It has been raining here almost continuously for the last thirty-six hours. Farmers, who were already far behind with their work, are almost discouraged. There has been not less than 12 or 14 inches of rain in the last two weeks and the ground is soaking. The roads are in an almost impassable condition and the city is threatened with a wood famine, as farmers cannot get into town.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 10.—It has been raining in central Iowa since Sunday afternoon. A large amount of water has fallen and the farming prospects are correspondingly gloomy. Not an acre of corn has been planted and hardly any plowing has been done. The only crop that is succeeding is grass and that is doing remarkably well. Wheat and oats, what little were planted, begin to look yellow on all the lower lands. Reports all agree that farmers are losing courage and unless there is a sudden change in the weather a great deal of the land will remain unplanted this year.

BURLINGTON, Ia., May 10.—There is little change for the better in the flood situation here. The river fell about 3 inches Monday and enabled the St. Louis, Keokuk & Northwestern trains to run through from St. Louis via Keokuk as usual. The trains are all late, however, and trainmen report that they had to plow through 2 feet of water at Alexandria, Mo. Word from that modern Venice says the situation is no better and not much worse. People are still hovering about on highlands, filled with sad forbodings of a summer of yellow ague. It rained off and on all Monday, and the prospects in the country are still of the gloomiest aspect. The situation is becoming alarming to both farmers and business men.

LINCOLN, Neb., May 10.—It has been raining for thirty-six hours and the bottoms are flooded. Between 200 and 300 families have been driven out of their homes. The suffering and desolation will be great, as most of the people are poor.

GENESEO, Ill., May 10.—It has rained here for many hours and farmers are greatly discouraged. The most valuable corn lands along Rock and Green rivers are from 3 to 5 feet under water. The 4,000-acre farm 11 miles east of here, owned by Samuel W. Allerton, of Chicago, is all under water. Eighty-five acres of corn on this farm are from 3 to 8 feet under water. No corn can be raised on the river bottoms this year and thousands of acres of fine hay lands have been ruined. Farmers on these bottoms are in worse luck than they have been in twenty years.

ST. LOUIS, May 10.—"Old Missip' is a boomin'" here and has reached the danger line even at this point, where the bank rises rapidly away from the stream. Much movable property along the shore from the northern end of the city to the south has whirled away and lumber and rails from the north are being tied down and otherwise secured to prevent their sudden disappearance before they can be taken apart and placed on shore.

The greatest havoc has been created in the "squatter" settlement called "Oklahoma," half a mile below the Merchant's bridge. Here dozens of house boats and cabins formerly on the shore are either half under water or floating down the river. The lumber yards along the river front are in danger of changing owners, while the steamer lines centering here find no room on the levee to store their surplus freight when their wharfboats overflow. No serious damage has yet been reported, but the river is at the danger line, 28 feet, and what another day's rise may do to the cotton stored in some of the levee cellars is yet to be told.

REFORMERS TO MEET.

A Call Issued for a Gathering in Cincinnati—The Object.

CHICAGO, May 10.—G. M. Miller, of Chicago, representing the executive committee of the national reformers, has issued a call for a meeting to be held in the parlors of the Palace hotel, Cincinnati, O., June 28, to determine what part the organization should take in the approaching campaign. The call says among other things:

"The object of the national reformers has not been to maintain an additional political party, but has been to unite the aggressive reform forces of the nation on the finance, land, transportation and suffrage reforms and suppression of the liquor traffic. We believe that the genuine reform elements are rapidly becoming ready for such union, and that by wise counsel and prudent procedure on the part of those who are fully aroused to the necessity of union, this vitally important result may be effected in the near future. We therefore invite all such of whatever party, to join us in an informal conference for the purpose of adopting some plan by which to promote fraternal relations between the reform parties, to the end that a union may be effected, and if this be not at present practicable that such attitude may be maintained by the respective parties toward each other that union against the united evils which they oppose may be effected at a later date, and if deemed wise to appoint an appropriate committee to secure a favorable consideration of such policy of fraternity and union by the national convention of the prohibition and people's parties respectively."

DEATH IN A MINE.

Five Colliers in Belgium Dashed to Pieces.

BRUSSELS, May 10.—A fatal accident occurred at the Trieuaisin colliery at Gilly, a village 3 miles northeast of Hainault. The day shift were entering the pit, and the cage was crowded with miners who were being lowered into the mine. Suddenly the chain by which the cage was raised and lowered broke, and its occupants were precipitated to the bottom of the pit. Five of the miners were instantly killed and some of the others were badly injured.

For Rivers and Harbors.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The house resumed discussion of the river and harbor bill. Mr. Holman (Ind.) attempted to have the clauses stricken out which provide for contract work to the extent of $26,747,000 in excess of the appropriations carried by the bill. The bill was finally passed by a vote of—yeas 186, nays 65. The bill as it passed the house carries an appropriation in round numbers of $21,300,000. In addition to this the secretary of war is authorized to contract for the completion of important projects of improvement to an extent involving the ultimate expendture of about $26,000,000.

STILL RAGING.

Floods Continue Their Work of Destruction in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Kansas.

PEORIA, Ill., May 9.—Thousands of people on Sunday visited the inundated districts surrounding this city. The river is still a raging torrent, with a roar that can be heard for a long distance. The cattle pens of the lower sugar works, in which thousands of head are fed, are under water, and unless the water quickly subsides the cattle must be removed.

At least 150 families of 500 souls on the river banks in this city, between here and Pekin, and in the La Marsh drainage district, have been driven from their homes by the rapidly rising waters. When the dyke in the La Marsh drainage district broke men were sent out to warn the people in the bottom, about thirty families living there. Some of them were on the roofs of houses and barns, while others had climbed trees as a measure of protection. Hogs and calves had been taken up on the roofs, too, but horses and cattle were left to their own resources. One man had sought refuge in a wagon box and taken a pig in with him. When the water raised the box began floating about the district, and he drifted with the tide.

All the residents have been accounted for with the single exception of the family of George Nichols. Many took refuge on this side of the river, but they have all been heard from. Nichols lived in a small house at the extreme lower end of the district, so far that it was impossible to prepare him for the threatened catastrophe.

OTTAWA, Ill., May 9.—The cool, dry weather of the last few days has removed a load of anxiety from the people hereabout. The great flood, unparalled since 1844, is subsiding.

Wednesday's cloudburst has cost the people of the Illinois, Fox and Kankakee valleys some millions of dollars. As the waters recede the full extent of the damage becomes apparent. The heaviest losses are to farmers. Thousands of acres of newly planted crops have been washed out and totally destroyed. Roads have been destroyed and bridges and culverts swept away. At many points where the lands lie low whole farms have been inundated and the only property saved is that in the second stories of barns and houses. Along the river banks in the towns and cities the damage to manufacturing interests has been great, but the loss to farming interests is now widespread and will entail great hardship.

The river towns from Joliet to Peoria are the heaviest sufferers by the stoppage of manufactories. Within a radius of 10 miles from Ottawa the direct losses from the flood are estimated at $100,000. At Marseilles, Ottawa, Utica, Peru and La Salle hundreds of men have been temporarily thrown out of employment. The sudden rise of water has destroyed manufacturing plants or rendered them useless.

ALEXANDRIA, Mo., May 9.—Another period of high water has struck this devoted country and for awhile it looked as if the unprecedented floods of 1881 were to be repeated. The worst damage has resulted in and around the town, which is periodically subject to rapid rises of the Mississippi, Fox, Skunk and Des Moines rivers. The great and continued rains of the last few weeks have swollen the upper rivers and streams, making great lakes of them and submerging the surrounding farming country, carrying off stock and small buildings and doing thousands of dollars of damage. Thousands of acres of wheat in Clark county, Mo., are now submerged. Stockmen are taking their animals to the highlands, and the inhabitants of Alexandria are preparing to take their families to a place of safety. People now go about this modern Venice in boats, and there is a great demand for this means of locomotion. The business in the town is, in some lines, at a standstill.

GOSHEN, Ind., May 9.—After all danger was thought to be over the big Goshen dam broke Saturday night and let an awful flood of water over the river bottoms between here and Elkhart. The water had fallen 2 feet Saturday and every one had begun hoping that the crisis was past. The dam, which was erected in 1866 at a cost of $18,000, will be at once rebuilt.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., May 9.—Reports of extensive devastation by the waters of the St. Joseph, St. Mary and Maumee rivers continue to come in. Not less than 500 farms on the lowlands were overflowed and a great deal of timber that was cut for the mills went down the stream.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 9.—Accounts of floods have been coming in from all over western Missouri and eastern Kansas, telling of flooded rivers and overflowing creeks and streams. In some localities the towns have been flooded and some damage is reported to dwellings by having their foundations washed out. The floods came so suddenly in other districts that the farmers had no time to prepare for them, and much of their stock has been drowned and washed away.

In Oklahoma territory a steady pouring rain has been falling for twenty-four hours and half the streams in the territory are out of their banks. Many bridges have been washed away. Nearly all the overland mails have been abandoned. The Santa Fe has suffered several washouts and trains are badly delayed.

TO BE TRIED FOR MURDER.

Head Brakeman G. W. Irwin Held Responsible for a Wreck.

DIXON, Ill., May 9.—George W. Irwin, whose criminal carelessness on the Illinois Central railroad at Sublette Tuesday night, resulted in the death of Engineer Trude, and the serious injury of several others, was placed under arrest in Amboy Thursday. He was brought to this city by Deputy Sheriff Norman Jewett, and placed in the county jail to await the action of the coroner's jury. Irwin is a young man, and was the head brakeman of the ill-fated freight train. The charge against Irwin is murder

Decision in the Hoyt Case.

The famous Hoyt case in St. Paul is over and the official has been vindicated. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant. This case has been the most notable of its kind in the northwest, and the verdict of the jury labels it a gigantic effort to levy blackmail on a prominent city official. McClellan demanded $25,000 of Hoyt for the ruin of his wife and then placed the wife on the stand to prove the charges. The case has cost an immense sum of money, as witnesses were brought from all over the country and depositions taken in several eastern cities.

Caught Fire from the Footlights.

A fire occurred in the State university building in St. Paul. An amateur entertainment was in progress when the front of the stage was found to be on fire, a leaky gas jet being the cause. The fire spread to the roof, which was burned, and the top floor was gutted. The spectators were cool, and dispersed with nothing approaching a panic. The loss was $25,000 and covered by insurance.

A "Human" Pig.

A peculiar freak of nature has been discovered at Hubbard. Warren Watkins, a farmer, on going to his pigpen, found a monstrosity in the shape of a newly-born pig. The animal had an almost human face, and was considered one of the greatest curiosities ever seen in that vicinity. The body was naturally formed and differed in no respect from the ordinary pig.

Large Steamer Launched.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Mr. N. R. O'Conor, the new British minister to Pekin, was secretary of legation at Washington between the years 1885 and 1887. Since that time he has been consul-general in Bulgaria. His promotion means an increase of salary from $10,000 to $27,500.

—The late Baron de Loe, the diplomat, was renowned as much for the beauty of his wife as for anything else. The baroness was a French woman of surpassing good looks. When a young woman she made a conquest of Bismarck at the casino of Biarritz.

—When Grant Allen in his story of "The Devil's Die" described his heroes as finding a wreck in midocean swarming with rats, the critics said it could not be. The wreckers who went aboard the Gottenburg castle, off St. Mary's isle, recently, had just that experience.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes, one of the most prolific writers in this country before the war, who was married at the age of sixteen to Seba Smith (author of the once noted "Jack Downing" letters), is living in Hollywood, N. C., and is still a contributor to one of the literary weeklies. She is eighty-four years of age.

—The duke of Clarence was an ardent admirer of Gladstone. On one occasion at the house of commons, when the venerable premier introduced his home-rule bill, Alber Victor was so carried away by the eloquence of the great orator that he clapped his hands heartily, which was particularly noticed as the etiquette of the house forbids such an outburst of enthusiasm.

—An acquaintance of Oscar Wilde relates the following incident which occurred in her hearing: Mr. Wilde has a wonderfully good memory when other people's jokes are concerned. One day when Whistler made one of his excruciatingly funny remarks Oscar murmured: "Ah! how good! I wish I had said that." And Whistler replied: "You will say it, Oscar! You will!"

—The amount of money earned by Dr. Morell Mackenzie during his thirty years of practice must have been very large. Within a few years of his commencing practice (in 1862) he was making $25,000 a year, and his income rapidly increased as his reputation spread, till about 1875 he touched high-water mark with "takings" of $50,000 to $70,000 a year—an enormous figure for a practice the bulk of which consisted of guinea fees.

—The Jewish scholar, M. Halevy, has compiled from the cuneiform tablets discovered at El Amura an account of an Egyptian governor of Jerusalem under Amenophis IV., 1,500 years before the Christian era. At that time Palestine was in a very disturbed state, overrun by the Babylonian hordes and misgoverned by the local satraps. At this early period Jerusalem was a populous city, and contained a temple consecrated to the god, Adar. The bureau of the royal archives was under the direction of a woman.

—The reporter on the Morning Advertiser of New York, Frederick J. Hamilton, who accompanied Dr. Cyrus Edson on his rounds among the typus patients and contracted the fever, has died. He exonerated his employers from all blame in the matter, stating that it was his zeal in his profession that caused him to take the risk. A few years ago, in order to investigate the Pasteur treatment, he was inoculated with the rabies germ and spent two months under treatment in the hospital, almost dying with hydrophobia.

THE LOCKED DOOR.

Two friends once closed between them, mutually,
A door with double locks, one on each side;
With separate keys, fashioned with cunning art.
Sure of himself, strong in fresh-wounded pride,
Each, for his own side only, held the key.

And thus for weary weeks they dwelt apart,
Till one at last, whose dropping tears had drowned
The fire of wrath that in his bosom burned,
Full of forgiveness, softly stole and turned
The key; then sought to ope the door, but found
The other lock still fast, still locked the door!
Then the old anger leaped to sudden flame,
And, laying on his friend's hard heart the blame,
He shot again the bolt and turned once more
To nurse, in bitterness, the reopened wound.

That night the other thought of olden days,
And melted in the memory; they seemed
So nearer than estrangement's later hours,
That of the quarrel he thought he must have dreamed,
And so unlocked the door; yet all his powers
Failed still to shake it. Then he muttered:
"Fool,
To think that stubborn churl would e'er repent!"
And socketward again the bolt he sent.

And thus, before the first friend's wrath could cool,
The other's heart grew hard again and kept
The bar between them while they waked or slept.

But one calm eve both waken from a dream
Of what has been, so clear forthshadowing, too,
The golden prophecy of what may be;
Each rises, and in the moonlight's softened gleam,
Resolves to try again all he can do.
Once more before the barrier he stands;
And, as, again, slowly each iron key
Rasps in the rusty wards, an answering sound
Comes from the other side. The great door flies
Open and leaves the old friends, newly found,
Lovingly looking in each other's eyes,
With reunited hearts and firm-clasped hands.

MRS. MERTON'S PROTEGE.

A Friendless Girl's Experience in the Great City.

People who expected things from Mrs. Merton said she was very dressy. People unexpectantly critical, changed the adjective to messy. One thing was certain about her wardrobe—it was large, if not select.

Mrs Merton herself would have told you that her heart was much larger—in fact that she was in some sort the special providence of needy women, particularly if they could sew. New gowns outright were of course to be intrusted only to a modiste whose charges were frightful. But the old ones, whose name was legion, changed their fashion so often, had new fronts to-day, new ruffles to-morrow, were turned inside out, and upside down, at such a rate that the good lady was a true kaleidescope of styles. Generally the changing meant work for madam's latest protege. It came to be noted, too, that that person was a wonderfully variable quantity. Mrs. Merton said the dear things got on and left her to hunt up other unfortunates. It was her peculiarity to lose interest in people when they began to be prosperous and able to do without her. Until they were—why there was nothing she would not do for them.

That made Mrs. Paulding smile behind her handkerchief. She had not been the Mertons' next neighbor five years for nothing. But she said nothing—only looked her hostess critically over as the latter turned and twisted before her mirror, craning her neck to get the best view of the new old gown, that had come home while the two ladies were on a joint shopping tour.

Presently she said, a little anxiously: "Do you think it fits?"

"Perfectly—ever so much better than it did when it came from Mme. Le Grandes."

"Yes, and only think of it, she charged thirty dollars for making it, when the cloth cost only twenty-five. Isn't it a shame!"

"Well, style costs, you know. Who did it over for you?"

"Oh, I want to tell you about her—maybe you can give her some work, too. She needs it, poor thing! She is a country girl, one I met last summer. It seems there is trouble of some sort at home, her mother died—father married again—brother forged and ran away—and I think she's got a lover they don't approve. Anyway she has come to the city for work—and only think! knows no soul here but me. Of course she came straight to the house and asked if she might give me as a reference to her landlady—and oh, my dear, she is so brave about it—said she knew it would be hard work—but she wasn't afraid."

"So you gave her work?"

"Yes, mending at first, and really her darning is a work of art. Then she seemed so handy I thought I might risk this dress. I always did love it, you know, and I had got a big grease spot right on the front breadth, so something had to be done with it, and now you see, there isn't a trace of it. She has washed and pressed the whole gown, and it looks so well I shall wear it for second best all winter. I am delighted with it, most of all to think I got her to do it out of charity. Are you sure the vest is just right?"

"It looks very well indeed."

"If it pleases you, it must be, you have such taste. She fixed it this way at first, but I thought it ought to be deeper, so I had her change it, then thought maybe this was best after all. I am so glad you like it. Really I hope you will let her make over something for you. We women, you know, ought to help each other, and the poor thing is just beginning."

"What are her prices?"

"Anything you have a mind to pay. I gave her fifty cents and her dinner, the day she worked for me here, and she was so grateful she didn't want to take it, because I had been good enough to let her use my name. Do you know I really feel that making this gown has been to her a labor of love? I wish she had waited, so you might have seen what a dear girl she really is."

"From what you say of her family, I shouldn't like to have her come about me."

"Oh, she isn't to blame for her family; besides I really don't remember what the trouble is. You know I hear so many romantic stories. If ever you see her you'll know she is honest as daylight."

"She may be, but I don't like the aroma of disreputable connections."

"Well, there is something in that. I really ought to be more particular, but you know how I am, my heart always gets the better of my head."

"But never of your purse," Mrs. Paulding thought, but did not say, as she trotted off home.

Five minutes later Letty Lane walked up the Mertons' steps—pretty Letty, with the lithe straightness of her own mountain trees still in her young shoulders. She held herself upright, but her tread was far from springy, and there was an almost hollow look in the honest, gray eyes.

Broken crackers and water is not good diet to work on, even when you have the salt of hope—the sauce piquante of pride—for seasoning.

The girl came of good stock—better, indeed, than her patroness. There was no hint of shame in the trouble that had sent her into the working ranks. She had said to Mrs. Merton: "My father has lost more than all his money. His surety has paid for him five hundred dollars—and I am not going home until I have made it good." But, as that lady said, she had so many histories to recount it was no wonder she often mixed and heightened them beyond recognition.

What Letty kept to herself was the fact that the "surety" was her own devoted lover, William Harding, Esq. He should never know her purpose until it reached fruition. That would not be long. She had all the faith and courage of inexperience, and she did not mean to make dresses always. Indeed, only until she got a foothold in something more to her taste.

She was genuinely grateful to Mrs. Merton. The lady had greeted her warmly, and been lavish of promises, whose face value honest Letty never dreamed of discounting. That was why she had been willing to spend a full week wrestling with the dusty, half-worn gown. All things considered, the result was more than creditable, but Letty could not help grudging the time and effort.

"I could have made a new dress with half the work, and ever so much more stylish," she murmured, as she shook out the completed garment, adding, with a little laugh: "As I am paid for it I ought not to mind; but I do hate to waste my work. I will never do it for anybody but dear Mrs. Merton."

She hated worse to go back for her money, but her rent fell due to-morrow, and she had just three cents.

Her bill was only five dollars. Mrs. Merton, she was sure, would double it. If she did Letty had made up her mind to buy as many apples as she could eat for "just this once." After that she would live sparsely, but never starve herself as she had done for three days past. In fact, she wondered if she would ever be able to see crackers, or dull green cloth, again without a little shiver of sick faintness. A warm nourishing odor met her inside the Merton door. Dinner was just coming to the table; better still, Mrs. Merton about to sit down to it in the gown of Letty's labors.

She ran up to the girl eagerly, crying: "You dear thing! How did you manage it? Mrs. Paulding says it looks so well I will not need another dress this winter."

"I am glad, so glad," Betty said, a little huskily. "I came—I wanted to see it on you—and find out how you liked it."

"Why, it's perfect—perfect. I don't see how you ever did it. And of course you want your money—need it, no doubt. Tell me how much I owe you?"

Letty handed her the bill. The next minute it was torn in two and flung at her feet, while her benefactress (?) half shrieked: "Five dollars! I never heard of such imposition. Why, the dress isn't worth it. I can buy a beautiful new one, ready-made, for less—and to think of asking such a price for work given you out of pure charity! It's a shame—an outrage. I don't see how you dare look me in the face."

For a minute Letty stood dumb and white. Then she said, steadily: "I told you at first, Mrs. Merton, the dress was not worth my working over—yet you declared it must be done—you could not part with it. I have put a week's hard work into it—pray accept it, as a slight recompense for the countenance you have given me, and let me wish you good evening."

"I'll give you two dollars—I meant to from the first," Mrs. Merton said, trying to thrust the money in the girl's hand. Letty dropped the coins at her feet, and walked out upon the street, blind, desperate, despairing. So blind, indeed, that even when she got to her own door she did not see a tall fellow who stood patiently awaiting. She was not deaf, though, and when William Harding's voice said: "Letty, darling, I have come to fetch my wife home," her pallor gave way to sweet, red blushes, and she answered, slowly: "I think—I'm sure, I am very glad of it."—M. C. Williams, in Yankee Blade.

QUEER BUSINESS METHODS.

A Man's Reason for Doing His Work Free of Charge.

The amateur photographer is, even at this late day, a source of wonderment to some simple minds. Just why he should be going about taking pictures, if not for hire, is something beyond their comprehension. The author of the recollections entitled "Across England in a Dog-Cart" says that he once photographed a mill in a country village and sent a copy of the picture to the miller.

Next year, on going that way again, he met the miller's man, who expressed his surprise that so much trouble had been taken without charge.

The photographer, expecting his joke to be understood, said, smilingly, in explanation: "It is only because our business is so very large. We take so many photographs that we can afford to do them for nothing."

A look of blank astonishment overspread the man's face, and then, after apparently turning the subject over in his mind, he exclaimed:

"Maister, Oi've a mind to have some more pictures took of mysel' and t' old missus!"

This was more than the joker had bargained for and he hurried away without asking his subjects to sit.

At another time, while he was photographing an inn, a man came up to him and asked: "How much do them likenesses cost? Oi should like my house took."

"Well," said the photographer, entering into the spirit of the occasion, "that depends on the size of the picture."

"As large as you can take 'em!"

"Well, then, the price will be a shilling."

But upon this the would-be customer began to bargain. A shilling was too much, he thought, but he would give sixpence.

"But mind ye," said he, "Oi won't pay till Oi gets ther picture; Oi doan't trust yer phograffer fellows, Oi doan't!"

He must have been surprised when, some weeks later, he received a photograph of his cottage, neatly framed by one of those "phograffer fellows," and all for nothing. Perhaps he thought it was only by accident that the little bill for sixpence was not inclosed.—Youth's Companion.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—New wood work requires one pound of paint to the square yard for three coats.

—Take egg stains from silver by rubbing with a wet rag that has been dipped in common table salt.

—Olive oil occasionally applied with a soft woolen cloth keeps buhl cabinets and ormolu ornaments bright. First clean off all the dust.

—Paint stains that are dry and old may be removed from cotton or woolen goods with chloroform. First cover the spot with olive oil or butter.—N. Y. Press.

—Doughnuts: Three cups of flour; three tablespoonfuls baking powder; one cupful white sugar, two eggs; milk or water to make a soft dough.—Detroit Free Press.

—To clean cloth or silk, sponge with warm water or coffee and a little ammonia; iron on the wrong side; if the silk is thin, add a little sugar to the water or coffee.—Good Health.

—To Stew Fish: Fresh-water fish is particularly nice cooked in this way: Cut the fish in small pieces, cover with fish stock, add a little more salt if needed, and simmer gently for twenty minutes.—N. Y. World.

—Ginger Snaps: One cup of molasses, one-half cup of butter or shortening, heated and put in the molasses, one-fourth cup of water, one teaspoonful of soda, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of ginger. Flour enough to roll rather soft. Bake in a quick oven.—Boston Budget.

—Cocoanut Candy: Slice some pieces of cocoanut very thin and line a buttered pan with them. Make a candy of four cupfuls of sugar, one of water and a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, cooked to a crisp; pour it over the cocoanut and set away to harden.—Household Monthly.

—Quick Puff Pudding: Stir one pint of flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, and a little salt into milk until very soft; place well-greased cups in a steamer, put into each a spoonful of the batter, then one of apple sauce (or canned berries), cover with another layer of the batter and steam twenty minutes.—Detroit Free Press.

—Dean of York's Cheesecakes: Line little pattypans with puff paste rolled very thin (any good, rich paste will do), and fill with lemon cream. Bake in a moderate oven for eighteen minutes. Let the cheesecakes partially cool; then slip them from the pattypans, and when they are cold arrange them on napkins on a flat dish and serve.—Good Housekeeping.

FASHION DOTS.

Seasonable Suggestions for My Lady's Wardrobe.

The most stylish princess dresses have the half low neck cut round and are worn with a Russian guimpe of rich material.

Watteau folds at the back of gowns are very much the mode. Frequently a bow with very long ends is used instead of the fold both on high necked and decollete gowns.

A favorite fashion of the hour for dinner gown is a Watteau plait of lace. These plaits are attached to gowns of any handsome material and are a rich and graceful addition.

At the present moment dress skirts cling tighter than ever. In extreme cases the entire dress looks like a cuirass, the skirt and bodice made in one and both equally tight.

Among the new silks and satins are those figured in polka dots of various sizes. These made with full skirts and baby waists with a full frill of chifon about the low cut neck are exceedingly pretty for young girls.

The best modistes use silk lining both for the bodice and skirts of gowns. Linings of silk fit so much better and are so much lighter than the ordinary lining that they are invariably preferred by those who have once had them.

Among the recently-imported gowns are those with glove-fitting, seamless round waists, with sheath skirts. They are designed expressly for slender women. Length is given to the waist when needed by adding a sharply-pointed girdle of silk or velvet.

The princess gown promises to be a leading favorite during the coming season. Long basques are being replaced by corsages, with the skirt draped up on them or drawn straight over their extreme edge, a single flat fold being laid where it joins the bodice.

Striped fabrics continue to be cut on the cross. The best modistes make them with a deep-gored seam up the skirt, throwing the lines out on either side in such a way as to form series of acute angles. This gives a bell-shaped effect to the skirt and an appearance of slenderness to the wearer.

A very large proportion of the new spring street coats are of light tan or ivory cloth of fine texture. The collars are either of velvet the same shade as the coat or are of the cloth stitched. The buttons are very large and are usually of white or smoked pearl. The most stylish of these coats have loose, double-breasted fronts, with the backs fitted and with the seams lapped.

The newest thing in the Russian blouse for evening wear is of a volant of lace which is just the right width. It is worn over a decollete bodice of colored silk and is gathered around the neck and is left low or finished with a band as is most becoming. The scalloped edge of the lace forms the lower edge of the blouse, which has unlined sleeves and is worn with a belt.—N. Y. Post.

Capes for Spring.

The three-quarter capes so recently threatened with banishment have taken a new and possibly a prolonged lease of life, as they appear among some of the latest importations. Those for early spring wear are made of fine, soft woolen fabrics, such as India cashmere and camel's hair, woolen corduroy, the rib exceedingly fine, and other like clinging texture. The shapes are not particularly changed. The arrangement over the arms and the shape of the back differ somewhat, and in some models hoods are used, yokes being a specialty of others. The chief divergence lies in the trimming of these capes. Some of the newest are covered entirely with netted silk in guipure designs, others of lace with familiar pattern. Some of the capes are very short, with a wide lace flounce at the lower edge, which flounce gives length without adding much to the bulk or weight of the garment. Passementerie, embroidery, etc., are conspicuous on some capes; others are remarkable for the entire absence of any elaboration in the way of trimming. There are, for summer wear, capes of like character, made of silk and lace, gray surah, cashmere, etc., which are more or less smart looking.—N. Y. Post.

NECESSITY FOR MILITIA.

The Valuable Service It Would Render in Case of War.

Outside of its legal duties to the state and nation, the militia has a well-defined status in the military policy which has grown up in a century of experience, and which, while not prescribed in any statute, is quite permanently established. This system comprises, first, a small regular army, to aid the settlement of the country by affording protection against Indians, to serve as a training-school for officers, and to provide a nucleus for the large armies necessary in time of war; second, the militia, to aid the civil authorities in maintaining order, to serve as a secondary training-school for officers, and to act at decisive points on the outbreak of hostilities; third, large armies of volunteers, enlisted for the period of the war, officered principally from the regular army and the militia, and upon whom fell the hard fighting of the war, and the conquering of a peace, almost to the exclusion of the regular army and the militia.

Our history shows that this military system, which has replaced the method of relying upon an unorganized militia which produced such a disaster in the war of 1812, is well adapted to our situation and requirements, and it is approved practically without dissent. In the two subsequent wars each of the three branches, the regulars, the militia and the volunteers, performed its allotted part. In Mexico the regular army sustained the bulk of the fighting, but it was assisted by a considerable body of volunteers, who at Buena Vista and elsewhere rendered most gallant and admirable service, and the officers of these volunteers had largely gained their military training in the militia. In the civil war, at its outbreak, the capital was saved from occupation, and communication between it and the north was maintained by the militia of New York and New England. It is difficult to overestimate the value of the service thus rendered in gaining time for the oaganization of the volunteer armies by whom the war was to be fought.

In any future war the militia will doubtless play the same part. At the outbreak its best brigades and regiments will be sent to decisive points, to hold these until volunteers can be organized to take their places. After that is accomplished they can render greater service by furnishing instructed officers to volunteer regiments, and thus disseminating their military knowledge, than by acting as military regiments. At no previous period of our history have we had so large a body of militia capable of rendering efficient service at the beginning of hostilities, or so many men available, by reason of their military instruction and enthusiasm, for officers of volunteers.

Yet, while this is true, much remains to be done still further to improve the efficiency of the militia. On a previous page it has been shown that the annual cost of the militia is about four cents per unit of population, and that in the states where the militia is most thoroughly organized the general government contributes but one-fortieth part of this. It is evident that the general government should give a larger portion, and should couple its donation with a more rigid inspection by its own officers as to the efficiency of the force to whose support it contributes. At present it divide its money among the states according to their representation in congress, regardless of the condition of the force in any state, provided only that this force is reported "organized and uniformed" to the extent of one hundred men for every senator and representative. The government might well make its assistance dependent on the number of men present in camp, fully armed and equipped and instructed in drill and rifle-practice as determined by its own inspectors according to certain definite standards. The total amount of the government contribution is also much too small. In 1808 it provided $200,000 for this purpose, which was 1¼ per cent. of its total revenue, and 2⅝ cents per unit of the population of that date. At present 1¼ per cent. of the total revenue would be $5,000,000, and 2⅝ cents per unit of population would be $1,722,000. Such sums are not necessary; but something more is necessary than the $400,000, or one-tenth of one per cent. of its revenue, which the federal government now contributes to the militia. The bill which failed in the last congress provided for an annual appropriation of $1,000,000, a sum which would doubtless be sufficient, and which at the same time is not only easily within its means, but less in proportion to revenue or population than it paid for more than thirty years after 1808, without receiving any adequate return.—Capt. F. V. Greene, in Century.

"EVERY WORD TRUE!"

So Says the Writer of That Famous Letter.

He Reiterates His Statements, Produces Additional Proof and Clearly Defines His Position.

[N. Y. Sun.]

It would be difficult to measure the interest and comment, not to say excitement, which the published letter of Dr. R. A. Gunn, which appeared in the papers yesterday, has occasioned. The prominence of the doctor and the unusual nature of the letter have both tended to add interest to the subject and make it really the talk of the town.

I called upon Dr. Gunn at his residence, No. 124 West Forty-seventh street, yesterday afternoon. I found the reception room crowded, and it was only after an hour's waiting that I succeeded in obtaining an interview.

Dr. Gunn is a distinguished looking man, and impressed me at once by his manly bearing and air of sincerity. I took the seat he courteously offered me, and said:

"Are you aware, doctor, of the commotion your letter has caused?"

Dr. Gunn smiled, and replied: "Things out of the ordinary usually cause comment. It is not a common thing for physicians to indorse and cordially recommend medicines other than those in the Materia Medica. History is full of instances of scientists who have indorsed discoveries they believe to be valuable, and have been denounced for so doing, and yet these same discoveries are blessing the world to-day. I hope I have the manhood and courage to be true to my convictions, and that is why I so openly and unhesitatingly indorse Warner's Safe Cure as being the greatest of modern discoveries for the cure of diseases which have baffled the highest skill of the medical profession."

I was impressed with the earnestness of the doctor, and saw that he meant every word that he said.

"How long have you known of this remedy, doctor?" I asked.

"Nearly ten years," he replied. "My attention was originally called to the Safe Cure by a serious case of Bright's disease, which was considered hopeless, and yet, much to my surprise, under its use the patient recovered. I have tried it in other cases since then constantly, and my original faith in its power has been confirmed. I have seen patients recover from inflammation of the bladder, gravel and Bright's disease when all other treatment had failed, and I have found it especially efficient in all female troubles."

"Can you specify any particular cases, doctor?" I asked.

"That is a delicate thing to do," the doctor replied; "but, as I always keep a written record of my cases, I can accommodate you."

Thereupon the doctor opened his desk and produced his record book. Turning over the leaves he said:

"Here is a case of a gentleman who was a great sufferer from inflammation of the bladder of long standing. He had consulted a number of physicians without benefit. When first consulted I myself tried the usual methods of treatment, but without success, and I finally advised him to try Warner's Safe Cure. He felt better from the start, and in a few weeks was entirely cured."

The doctor turned a few pages further, and then said:

"Here is another case. It is that of a gentleman who had frequent attacks of renal calculi, which, as you know, is gravel forming in the kidneys. He had never been able to prevent these formations, but after an unusually severe attack I recommended him to try the Safe Cure, which he did, and, although it is three years since he took the remedy, he has never had an attack since."

"Here is a most remarkable case. It is that of a lady who had suffered for some time from Bright's disease. She became enciente, and about the fourth month suddenly became blind, had convulsions and finally fell into a state of coma, caused by uremic or kidney poison. Several physicians who saw her said she could not live, and in this view I fully concurred. As she could still swallow I said, as a last resort, that they might try Warner's Safe Cure. They did so, and to the surprise of every one she recovered. She has since given birth to a living child, and is perfectly well."

"Those are certainly most wonderful cases, doctor," I said, "and while I do not for a momemt question their authenticity I should consider it a great favor if you would give me their names. I think the importance of the subject would fully justify it."

"In the interest of other sufferers I think you are correct," Dr. Gunn finally observed, after a moment's thought. "Both the lady and her husband are so rejoiced, so grateful, over her recovery that I know she is only too glad to have others hear it. The lady is Mrs. Eames, wife of the well known costumer. She was not only restored, but is in perfect health to-day."

I thanked the doctor for his courteous reception, for the valuable information imparted, and I feel assured that his generous and humane nature will prevent him from feeling other than glad at seeing this interview published for the benefit of suffering humanity.

DELANO DIARY.

—The City Grocery's new delivery wagon on the streets looks quite metropolitan.

—Rev. William Campbell will preach at the Presbyterian church on Sunday at the usual hour, 3 p. m.

—Rev. J. R. Davies could probably be secured for the asking to preach a Decoration Day sermon on Sunday, May 29, the day before Memorial Day, at the M. E. church, where all old soldiers and their friends would meet with a hearty welcome from pastor and congregation. He would do the occasion justice.

—H. Galley's family left on Thursday morning for Royalton, their future home to which place their father had preceded them and purchased a furniture store and where he expects to follow his vocation. Delano regrets the loss of the family from among its citizens where they will be missed. Dr. Shrader is to occupy their residence here.

—Some of the small boys are seriously talking of "reciprocating" on Charley Conzet, whom they accuse of getting the council to stop their ball playing on the streets and have in contemplation the circulating of a petition to be presented to the village council asking them to stop Charley from driving that pacer of his on the streets at so high a rate of speed.

—The treasurer of the Delano Independent School District notifies the district through the Eagle that it will be necessary to refund at least $10,000. of the debt on the school house, hoping to pay this year the other $2,800. It seems to a good many people that the school house financiering is poorly done when after ten years paying interest amounting to something like $7960. they find there is still due $12,800. on the house, especially when they remember that about $7. out of $10. of the tax collected this year was for school district purposes. Wonder what has become of that sinking fund we hear so much about? Was it not for the purpose of paying the principle? And is not ten years long enough to accumulate a sufficiency to make a payment.

—The Eagle intimates that the suggestion of an ex-councilman that the town help pay the school debt would be in order and suggests that if any part of the village funds is to be used for that purpose a special law should be passed this winter. To which we would suggest that after taking into town Messrs. Hawker, Cramer, Brandes and Young a few years ago the Eagle's string to special legislation broke and she would probably not be able to cut another such a caper yet a while. Why don't the school pay its own debts out of the sinking fund? It is claimed that the village is nearly out of debt as an excuse for this enterprise. Did the manipulator of school funds do anything to get it out of debt or was it because of a change in administration that the village was enabled to prosper financially better than did the Delano Independent School District. It looks kind of funny to see the great financier asking the assistance of the village council in this matter after all his blowing.

—Our school examining board held a meeting Saturday but, as usual, failed to accomplish anything. With one chronic kicker on the board it is impossible to do anything and the sooner a new board is created the better it will be.—Eagle.

The old board has been doing business in a slip shod kind of way for years and never even organized until the last meeting when the County Superintendent found it necessary to have the name of the chairman of the board to a report to Superintendent Keihl that all the teachers had been properly examined which was not the case. Then I. Gutzwiller was chosen President and affixed his signature to the document after trying to have the entire board do so and failing in his attempt. Then some omissions in the certificates of teachers was filled making it appear that one was good for another year and a record of the proceedings made which the secretary moved be approved when a motion wass made to amend by striking out the reference to the two year's certificate. Neither motion receiving a second the board on motion adjourned. A board that would do the things the law asks of it would be a good thing to have.

—Some of our correspondents got left out again this week.

—J. D. and H. E. Crandall, of Rockford, were over today shipping some of H E.'s patent beehives.

—Professor Bohn is consideraply excited over the discovery of a spring on his lots that made its appearance today.

—On Tuesday Sam Pape informed us that we need look for no summer before the National Republican Convention at Minneapolis adjourns.

—The river is at quite a good stage and from present prospects likely to remain so for the summer and yet the steam launches and sailing yachts have not yet superceded the fishing smacks on her smooth waters.

—The Eagle claims to be satisfied with the way she gets her mail. We don't believe it. If she has heard no complaints she must be growing deaf. If she thinks she never criticised the late administration she had better consult some of her old files.

—It seems kind of strange that boys will work hard to earn a few dimes and spend them gambling on a wheel of fortune on fair day, but more mysterious still is it to see full grown men, fathers of families who need their earnings put down their dimes and wait for the arrows to point out to them that the little old gentleman is that much richer at their expense. People complain that gambling is allowed and then contaibute their mite to keep it going or pay to see the fun and then grumble because they lost. If the proprietor did not make money he would stop and those that patronize him must pay him for coming.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Oregon spent last Sabbath with his father-in-law, Joseph VanEman, and family.

Dr. Kee Wakefield, of Hutchinson, has been elected an alternate to the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis.

Len Terry went to Howard Lake today for the first time since removing to this place. He will return with the folks on Saturday.

Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, put in a good day's work on Saturday, interviewing old settlers concerning "Historical Facts", while he and they attended the Delano Fair.

Two brothers named Plumb, claiming to be cousins of the late Senator Plumb, of Kansas, Sundayed at Danforths' Hotel. One of them could quote most too many maxims for T. K.

County Cullings.

If Chairman Quinn expects to carry Wright county for the Democrats this year he ought to be getting his clubs ready.

The Tribune suggests Waverly for a place to open the Democratic campaign. A good suggestion. Let us all be there.

W. H. Cady, a leading Prohibitionist has been elected President of Buffalo in place of Dr. Barton resigned on account of absence from the village.

The Howard Lake Herald seems to have struck a snag, as she claims to be in receipt of a letter from Victor claiming that it was not the Victor delegation that was meant by the Herald. The Herald accuses us of being hard up for news, we wonder what the Herald calls it when she copies our local item substituting a ——, and thereby treading on the corns of parties we did not refer to nor suspect would fly up at what we said. If the Victor correspondent had read the GAZETTE he would have known who was meant and what was said about them.

Old settlers are considerably stirred up far and near cancerning the charge of the Rockford correspondent that our "Historical Facts," by Hon. B. F. Chaistlieb, of Long Lake, who is using every means to have his history correct "are a little off facts and a little on fiction," where he relates the celebration of the fourth of July. One of them suggests that Mr. Farnham must have begun celebrating earlier in the day than the balance of them to forget all about so memorable an occasion. From accounts Mr. F. must have attended the celebration in some other neck of woods if he heard the Hon. Dana E. King speak as his brother spoke at Greenwood in 1861.

The blow has fallen and the BUFFALO GAZETTE last week cut us off its exchange list. The doctor has been "on his ear" for some time past and the last feather broke the camel's back. There is however, one consolation. The Tribune can do without the GAZETTE but when good Democratic literature is needed, our columns will have to be drawn on heavily for ideas. So that while we lose an exchange we gain a subscriber.—Waverly Tribune.

From the above we would infer that the Waverly editor had taken a funny spell. We have not nor did we think of cutting the Tribune off our exchange list. We are glad to know that the Tribune editor considers himself independent enough to run without the GAZETTE also that he appreciates the GAZETTE so well as to rustle about and secure one from which to make a liberal quotation in the same column with the article quoted, threatening to make a subscriber of us. Next time you happen to miss a copy of the GAZETTE just drop us a postal card and we will forward you one to obviate the necessity of borrowing from your neighbors.

Notice.

Old soldiers and citizens are requested to meet at the City Hall, on Monday evening May 16, at 8 o'clock to make arrangements to observe Decoration Day in a fitting manner.

We are informed by an old settler of this vicinity that there is a few errors in the History of Greenwood given in the GAZETTE in recent publications. He claims the first 4th of July celebration at Greenwood was a year or so later than 1856 as stated also that Miss Sophia Conzet was born in February, four months before Miss Kate Young was born, making Miss Conzet the first lady born in Greenwood. C. M. Conzet, of Delano, was born two years before and is probably the first white child born in Greenwood.

INDEPENDENCE.

Last week your Independence correspondent was unavoidably absent we hope without any serious results as regards the reputation of your valuable paper. Had been studying and reading up St. Paul election news, not St. Paul the devine, do not know that he ever run for office, but St. Paul at the head of navigation on the upper Mississippi. The city of St. Paul has gone Republican for the first time in many years, but this does not assure Ben Harrison's election by any means as some Republicans think. There are many things the Republican party will have to meet during the coming campaign. The living issues of the day that are now being agitated are bound to come to the front; they cannot be kept back. It seems to me that we have lived under the old dispensation about long enough; its ordinances and official sacrifices have become to the common people of this country almost a dead letter. The Moses that led the children of Israel out of Egyptian bondage is dead (A. Lincoln) and he rests with his fathers, peace to his ashes, for he was a noble man, one the Republican party should be proud of. But after him has arisen another king who regards not the laws of Moses (Lincoln) but is inclined to usurp authority over the people for whom he has no regard and is after only the loaves and fishes. By mathematical calculation we find that the Republican party of this country has been in power 32 years with the exception of Cleveland's four year's administration and still the Republican party say "It is necessary for us to be in power in order to preserve this union, the laws and the free constitutions." "Can there be no good thing come out of Nazareth" (any other party). Would say that reformation like a motion to adjourn is always in order. Now the question naturally arises can we get reformation or reform, and every sane person will admit that we are in need of it, out of a party that has been in power so long. We believe almost everybody will admit that General Jackson was a good man and made a good President but am sorry to say he was the first to introduce the spoils system, that is to the victor belongs the spoils, which we think has been a very bad precedent. It is nothing more nor less than a corrupting fund. Parties like individuals may talk and boast of the glory they have acheived and the wrongs they have righted but do the people always bear them out in it. When we vote let us remember that the interest of our country is at stake and vote for principle rather than party. Mr. Editor I feel that the subject of reform is an inexaustable one and would contain more than the five books of Moses, but lest I weary your patience I forbear. May come again later on.

Neighborhood news in this neck of the woods is not very plenty just now, the news gatherers have not been around very much of late on account of cold and windy weather we suppose.

W. J. Bursell, of Minneapolis preached at Independence A. C. church last Sunday forenoon assisted by Dr. O. R. Fassett, of Rockford Also preached at Rockford in the evening.

George Phillips and wife, of Minnetonka, were visiting relatives in Independence last Sunday.

And for handsome design

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

Our Candidate for Governor.

We have kept the picture of our candidate for Governor at the head of our columns for the past few weeks, and have heard many allusions to the fact from men and women of different political preferences but in our own village not one but has said that he was a good man for the position. Judge Wilson needs only to continue his campaign from where he left off two years ago to win the race. He has canvassed a large portion of the State and is personally and favorably known to perhaps as many of the voters of the State as is any other man likely to run on any ticket. He is a man who can draw a crowd and impress them with his honesty and integrity wherever he may choose to speak. His clear and logical reasoning on the tariff question as well as his treatment of minor matters takes with the people and if he comes within a radius of ten miles or even more of Delano he is sure of a large and enthusiastic audience and we take it for granted the same is the fact in other neighborhoods and villages throughout the State. The work he done was not anything to be ashamed of, was no boomerang to come back at him and injure him, but was good honest work for the right and work that if continued now after the people have improved the past two years in educating themselves on the ideas advanced in the campaign of 1890, will doubtless result in electing Thomas Wilson and others of his faith to positions for which they may be candidates.

THE union of the Democratic party with the Alliance pary is called "Fusion!" Why not call it a "Surrender.—Carver Free Press.

JINGO JIM warms up to the race on the home stretch and like an old racer sniffs the breezes as if he caluclated to be a winer for the nomination.

WE believe Robert T. Lincoln could carry more states for president than Benjamin Harrison. That name Lincoln has a good sound.—Hutchinson Leader.

SELLING the time of negro convicts in some of the States at auction don't look just exactly right and yet we don't see so very much difference between that and letting out the labor of convicts in penetentiaries in other states to the highest bidder.

MAY 17, was duly observed in Minneapolis by Norwegians as the anniversary of their National Independence Like the 4th of July to citizens of United States the 17th of May each year brings fresh to mind of the Norwegians even if he is living in another land, the birth of freedom in his own native land.

IT don't seem to be just the right thing for New York to dictate to all the political parties of this broad land who they shall nominate for President. If they don't want a man from their own State that that the people all over the Union outside of the Empire State would welcome as a candidate on the Democratic ticket we should go outside of this State for our man.

THE house on Monday by a vote of 183 to 47 passed a bill putting binding twine on the free list. It is not likely, should the bill become a law that it will affect the price of binding twine to any marked extent as the duty is merely nominal.—Buffalo Journal

This is a quite way of the Journal editor of letting his party friends in the Senate, at Washington down easy when they vote against thes bill. If it will not affect the price to any marked extent because the duty is merely nominal. What does he think it would do if the tariff was protective as before Senator Cushman K. Davis tackled it so vigorously? Tariff is a tax, then according to Senator A. Y. Eaton.

Tariff is a Tax.
Grover Cleveland says so.
Tariff is a Tax.
Thomas Wilson says so.
Tariff is a Tax.
The Gazette says so.
Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

Tariff Pictures.

The leading mowing machine manufacturers of the United States announced a year or two ago that they did not make discounts for export on their mowing machines for Canadian markets, and yet Canada bought from Great Britain, although she lays the same tariff on the products of both countries. Protected America makes cheaper and better machines for the farmer than free trade England.—New York Press.

11,013 mowing machines from this country in one year, and only 50

If the above is true what is the tariff on articles used in making reapers for? It is not so far from this country to Canada as it is from England and it looks as if the difference in freight might amount to something in favor of the United States market.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 13, 1892.

Presidential rumors have been flying thick and fast this week. First, it was said that Senator Hill had made up his mind to withdraw in favor of Govenor Flower. Next that Mr. Cleveland would soon make public a letter declining to allow his name to be presented to the convention, and advising the party to seek its candidate in the West. And still another That Mr. Cleveland had submitted a proposition to Senator Hill for their joint withdrawal in favor of some New York man to be mutually agreed upon, or in the event of that being rejected, or their inability to agree upon a New Yorker, to withdraw in favor of some western man, with Hill as Vice President. These all belong to the "important if true" class of news, and are only mentioned to show the feverish condition of things political at this time.

The sending of ex-Senator Bruce, the negro who is a citizen of the District of Columba when a fat local office is to be filled and a citizen of Mississippi when delegates to a republican national covention are to be elected, upon a Southern tour to strengthen the Harrison hold upon the instructed delegates to the Minneapolis convention, is regarded as the most direct acknowledgment of weakness yet made by the Harrison managers; but it is said that something had to be done at once to counteract the work that anti-Harrison agents, plentifully supplied with money, are doing among negro delegates, or else they would all be opposed to Harrison by the time the convention meets. Whether Bruce will use money or promises to conjure them with is not altogether certain, but from what others have told about othere Presidential years, it may be assumed that both will be used, the former sparingly and the latter plentifully.

A stongly backed movement in favor of putting refined sugar on the free list, is making itself felt in Congress. It is claimed, doubtless with truth, that in no other way can the destested sugar trust be so quickly or so surely shorn of its power. Many republicans privately admit their belief that it would be a good move to put refined sugar on the free list, but their votes would be controlled by their party leaders should the Ways and Means Committee of the House decide to favorably report such a measure, and not by their private opinions.

Massachusetts manufacturers are urging the House Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill placing iron ore on the free list and another making a general reduction in duties on manufactures of iron.

Representative Fithian, of Illinois, thinks that while the republicans are hurrahing over the legislation granting the rights and privileges of American registry to the two big ships of the Inman Line, is a good time to get the question of free ships before Congress and the conntry, so he has introduced a resolution asking that June 6, 7 and 8 be devoted by the House to a discussion of the bill providing for the free admission to American registry of ships built in foreign country, the final vote to be taken at 2 o, clock p. m. on the 8th. This is regarded by democrats generaly as a good move, as the bill, if passed by the House and forced to a vote in the Senate, will show that the republican Senators did not vote to admit the City of Paris to Amerian registry because they favored free ships, but because they wanted the Inman company to get some of the Postoffiice ocean mail subsidy which they could not receive without having an American register. It is probable that Mr. Fithian's, or a similar resolution, will be adopted by the House.

It is believed that Mr. Blain is encouraging if he did not actually instigate the oppsition to the nomination of T. Jefferson Coolidge as Minister to France, which has made itself apparent in the Senate. The nomination was made by Mr. Harrison in direct opposition to the wishes of Mr Blaine, who wanted the place given to the Representative Hitt, of Illinois. An attempt is being made to get all of the silver Senators to vote against the confirmation of Coolidge because of his extreme single financial views, which he has gloried in making public at every opportunity notably in his speaches before the Pan American Congress, of which he was a member.

Whether it be true or not I cannot say, but many believe that Mr. Harrison is deliberately holding back the nomination of a successor to the Justice Bradley, of the U. S. Supreme Court, for no better reason than to control votes of delegates to the Minneapolis convention, by holding out hopes to certain gentlemen who are anxious to name the man for the vacancy.

Mrs. Thomas A. Hendricks, the widow of the man who had the honor of being Vice-President upon the only two democratic tickets elected since 1856 is in Washington.

Langston, the negro ex-Cogressman who had divided with Mahone the control of Virginia's federal potronage, has been notified that his action in opposing instruction for Harrison has shut him out, and that he will get no more favors.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Crow River Valley.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

4TH OF JULY CELEBRATIONS.

On July 4th 1855, some of the residents of the village of Greenwood assembled at the cabin of John M. Burt to commemorate the day, and as there were but few settlers in the place then; the number of participants were limited, being John M. Burt, J. D. Young, E. O. Newton and wife, Wm. Gould. They perhaps did not carry out all the details of the more elaborate 4th of July celebrations of the older regions, but they met with the idea of celebrating and passed the day inspired with all the patriotism usually manifested on those occasions, being intensified by the ever presence in their hearts of the dear ones that they had left behind in the far east, the few months previous, wondering how they were passing the great National Anniversary.

The attention of the writer being called to an item of the Rockford correspondent of the Delano Eagle, appearing in the issue of May 5, 1892 of that newspaper which reads as follows:

"ROCKFORD, May 4.—The "Historical Facts," as published in the GAZETTE last week, are a little off facts and a little on fiction. The story is very well told, however, and just as good as facts but it is not historical. The first celebration held in the Crow River valley was held at Rockford on July 5, 1859. The celebration at Greenwood, the only one ever held there, was on July 4, 1860 (not 1856). Thomas R. Briggs, now of Howard Lake, was president of the day and chief manager. The Declaration of Independence was read by F. C. Lindsley and the oration was by Hon. Dana E. King, a brother of W. S. King, of Minneapolis. The celebration was well conducted, quiet and orderly and was at that time considered a grand success."

The writer would say in reference to the matter, that he was not personally known to the facts but that early in the 60ies in the line of his profession (a surveyor) he became acquainted with the people of the Crow River Valley to a considerable extent, and in conversation with old settlers as to their experiences as pioneers they sometimes humorously alluded to a certain 4th of July celebration in which A. G. Sexton and Capt. John B. Edgar figured in the ceremonies of the day, as the writer recollects about as he narrated in the issue of the GAZETTE of April 29, 1892, and in preparing that article, he inquired of old settlers as to the year, and was informed by certain ones that it was 1856; and the year of that occurrence as given in the GAZETTE of April 29, and even the occurrence itself being called in question by the Rockford correspondent, the writer has made some investigations as to 4th of July celebrations in the Crow River Valley, consulting old settlers who were present on those occasions and files of contemporaneous newspapers, and from the data thus collected it wonld appear that the Rockford correspondent of the Eagle is also, as he says of the "Historical Facts", "a little off facts" and consequently off history, but as it is not the desire of the writer to enter into a controversy with the Rockford correspondent of the Eagle in this matter, he will present what he has obtained from old settlers verbally and by correspondence, and from contemporaneous newspapers.

The venerable J F. Powers and J. D. Young say that the occurrence took place in 1856.

DONNELLY, Minn, May 9, '92.

HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB,
LONG LAKE, Minn.

Dear Sir. I see that Mr. Farnham attacks your statements in the BUFFALO GAZETTE regarding the first 4th of July celebration in the Crow River Valley I desire to say that in the main you are correct; the date was 1857 instead of 1856 and there are a good many people yet living who participated in the festivities of that occasion. I now recall the names of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Powers, Thos. and Mrs. Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Allen, Jno. Burt, A. G. Sexton and I have no doubt many of the old settlers will remember the joys of that occasion.

T. R. Briggs kept the hotel (the Beaver Home) at which the dinner was served and my recollection of the matter is that over 150 people were fed although I must confess that the closing exercises of the day is somewhat obscured in my own memory as well as a good many others that were there.

I think Mr. Farnham must have commenced celebrating earlier in the day than the balance of us to have entirely forgotten so joyous occasion as the 4th of July, 1857.

With sentiments of highest regard I remain Truly Yours,

A. H. TAISEY.

And here is a second letter from Mr. Taisey in reply to a letter from the writer calling his attention that A. G. Sexton fixed the date of the occurrence later than 1857. See Sexton's letter in a later part of this article.

DONNELLY, May 12, 1892.

HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB,
LONG LAKE.

Dear Sir. Both your letters received, The more I reflect upon this matter the more I am convinced that 1857 is the date.

I kept the hotel myself in 1856 and my wife was away from home on the 4th of July as Mr. Power's family will remember especially Mrs. J. D. Young who will undoubtedly remember several little incidents of that day. That it was in 1857 I am positive for I left there for good in April 1859.

It was either 1857 or 1858 I could not be positive which. I have no objections to the publication of anything I might say. Please send me copies of paper containing your future article and Farnham's reply thereto.

Yours Truly,
A. H. TAISEY.

INDEPENDENCE.

Farmers are now preparing their ground for corn and potatoes and should the weather keep fine it will be only a short time before all corn and potatoes will be planted.

The late rains keep the roads in bad condition all the time.

Quite a number were over from Rockford last Sunday to the Independence A. C. church to hear Elder Pollard, of Minneapolis, preach.

The meadows and fields of grain begin to look green and the indications are that Spring in its glory is here. We have been long in waiting for the time to come.

The county commissioners of Hennepin county have laid out a new road in Independence starting just west of Maple Plain and running south until it strikes the Minneapolis and Watertown road, thence to Mound City on Lake Minnetonka. Some of the Independence people object to the road.

Some of the Independence people declare their intentions to attend the World's Fair at Chicago in '93. Open on Sunday, whisky every day in the week; all these things combined will make it one of the worst places for sin and iniquity that was ever on this continent. Do not think the good to be derived from the enterprise will near come up to the evil it will produce.

The Republican farmers will get a good price for eggs, butter and spring chickens by taking a load to Minneapolis during the National Republican Convention. Can take in a load of produce and bring back a load of politics. We suppose seats into the convention will be at a premium.

A number of Independence farmers will put up new buildings this summer.

The advent Christian church of Minnesota will hold their annual conference and camp meeting at Monticello, Wright county, beginning June 12th 1892, holding over two Sundays. Everybody is invited to attend.

Mrs. Archy Young, of Morris, Minn. and Thomas Shaw, of Delano, were calling on friends in Independence Monday.

Elder M. Wellcom, of Monticello will preach at the Independence A. C. church Sunday, May 29th at 10:30 a. m. Also at Rockford in the afternoon.

Mr. Hoar, of Camden, visited D. R. Thompson one day last week.

Fishing would be quite good now if the parties owning dams across the river were compelled to provide fishways in them. There are laws to this effect and we understand a petition is being circulated in this village and vicinity to have them opened. Fish below Dayton are very plentiful there being no dam to interfere with their coming from the Mississippi.

Rev. Mr. Lamnan, of Minneapolis, has taken Mr. Noyes place during the latter's absence and holds services at the Presbyterian church at the usual hours. Mr. Noyes has gone to Oregon to attend the National Convention of Presbyterian clergy as a delegate from Minnesota.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Tallman visited Minneapolis Wednesday.

J. Benner and Frank Johnson did business in the city Tuesday.

ADVICES from Shanghai say that the milltary students at Shum-King are endeavoring by violence to expel the British missionaries from that city. It is claimed that their action is taken with the connivance of the viceroy of Se-Shuen, in which Shum-King is located, and that the feeling of hostility to foreigners is rapidly growing in that region.

GENERAL commiseration will follow the heedless rogue who, in rifling garments in the dressing-rooms of a New York theater, made off with a pocketful of "gags" prepared for the principal clown of a so-called comic opera troupe that is rehearsing for a tour of the country. Of course, the thief will read the "gags;" that will be his punishment.

THE old "Parliamentary Oak," in Clipstone park, England, is believed to be 1,500 years old. The tallest oak in that country, called the "Duke's Walking Stick," is higher than the spire of Westminster abbey, and the largest is the "Cowthorpie," which now measures seventy-eight feet in circumference, and at one time, with its branches, covered more than an acre of space.

THE recent extensive downpour of rain in the Mississippi valley and lake region has been productive of much inconvenience and some loss. It has caused the breaking of levees, the consequent overflow of many thousands of acres on the bottom lands and laid under water vast areas outside of the immediate vicinity of the water courses, retarding field work and giving rise to numerous apprehensions in regard to the crop yield of next autumn.

"THERE is nothing new under the sun," says the wisdom of an ancient philosopher. It is as true now as it was in Solomon's time. An English inventor of weaving apparatus recently examined the cloth in which a mummy of the earliest Pharaoh times was wrapped, and he found that the threads were crossed in exactly the same manner as those of the fabrics woven by the machine which he had just patented. And we call this the most advanced scientific age of the world!

IT has been discovered that Napoleon I. was a book canvasser; that George Washington followed the same illustrious business, selling over two hundred copies of Bydell's "American Savage"; that Longfellow sold books by subscription; that Daniel Webster handled De Tocqueville's "America"; that Gen. Grant canvassed for Irving's "Columbus"; that Blaine began life as a canvasser for a "Life of Henry Clay"; and that Bismarck, when at Heidelberg, took orders for one of Blumenbach's handbooks.

YOU need not worry over the unsolved problem as to the length of time the sun will light and heat the world. It has been estimated by some who have little else to do that the utmost amount of heat the sun could have originally contained would supply radiation for 18,000,000 years. The same authority estimates that four-fifths of the energy has been dissipated and that the remaining one-fifth will continue to shed its effulgence for 3,600,000 years. These calculations may be erroneous by millions of years, but the errors are unimportant, for the great illuminator will serve out his day and generation.

SOME extraordinary rich samples of gold ore were brought into Salt Lake City from a new district on the edge of the desert, and it is believed the strike is a very rich mine of which Brigham Young knew, but which became one of the lost mines of that region. The ore assayed from $2,000 to $3,000 a ton. The man who brought it in says there is a large vein of the ore apparently equally rich. Tradition says a very rich mine was discovered somewhere in that region twenty-five years ago by a Mormon, and for some reason Brigham Young forbade the prospector to work it or make its whereabouts known.

THREE towers each about 300 feet high will be erected on the world's fair grounds at Jackson park, Chicago, for the accommodation of sightseers who visit the fair. They will not be ordinary steel and iron frames, but beautifully ornamental structures modeled after towers found in Italy and other portions of southern Europe. Their exterior will look more like temples than anything else, for about the interior framework will be constructed a wooden exterior covered with staff of ornamental designs, so that the towers will harmonize in beauty and other general effects with the big buildings.

GAINESVILLE, Tex., May 16.—News has reached here of a terrible cyclone in the Turkey Valley in Greece county. It swept from one end of that fertile spot to the other, literally demolishing everything in its path. Even dugouts were unroofed and people lifted out of them and hauled along the ground for incredible distances. The extent of the loss of life cannot yet be ascertained. Five, however, are known to have been killed and it is probable many are fatally hurt. Hardly a person in the valley escaped without injury of some kind. Coffins are being hauled from the nearest towns.

THE FLOODS.

Still Causing Much Damage and Some Loss of Life in Several States.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—The river at 10 p. m., Sunday measured 34.9 feet and is still rising at the rate of a tenth an hour. On the docks most all perishable matter has been removed, so that in the city proper but little more damage can be done except as is naturally occasioned by flooded basements, etc. A reporter took a trip down the river for about 40 miles Sunday. The situation viewed from the pilot house of the steamer is one which at first glance is seen to be most serious. Thousands of acres on which a week ago the waving wheat was growing are now vast lakes, whose surface is broken by floating pieces of furniture, dwellings, and here and there the body of a cow or hog. From bluff to bluff this is the unbroken monotony that greets the eye. Ten miles is the average width of the river as far down as the steamer proceeded. Hundreds of homes have been abandoned and the number of cattle destroyed is expected to reach into the thousands.

Bends island, on the Illinois side, is 3 feet under water. Near here on the Missouri side in the vicinity of the White house is the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern railway track. The embankment, which is dealt vigorous blows by the rapidly flowing current, has in many places been undermined and no trains have been run over the track for thirty-six hours. It is stated that two St. Louis peddlers were drowned early Sunday morning in the Merrimac river, but their names could not be learned. At Foster's island 4,000 acres of fine farming land are covered with 2 feet of water and all hope of raising a crop this year has been given up.

On Mullanphy island, 36 miles north of St. Louis in the Missouri river, fourteen women and children were rescued from a watery grave Sunday morning by a volunteer corps of St. Louis citizens. Had the rescuers been two hours later they would have found only dead bodies, as the water was rapidly encroaching on the small section of land on which the party stood shivering and half naked, and here they had been for hours, after being driven from their homes by the flood.

Reporters stationed on the Merchants' bridge in North St. Louis have seen several dead bodies floating in the water. Most of them have evidently come a long distance. It is now a common sight to see small houses and various articles of furniture traveling past. All railway traffic over the Eads bridge has been abandoned owing to the flooded tracks in Illinois. The Burlington, Alton and other roads run passenger trains in over the Merchants' bridge.

NEW MADISON, Ill., May 16.—The Madison levee has broken and all that protects this town from being flooded is the Chicago & Alton embankment. The water is within two feet of the top of this, and if it gives way, which it threatens to do in several places, the town will be flooded and very serious damage done. The levee guarding Horseshoe lake and Cahokia creek to the northwest are threatening to give way at any moment and danger of a flood in that direction is also imminent

CARROLLTON, Ill., May 16.—The Illinois river is still rising at the rate of one-half inch an hour and great damage is being done to meadows and growing wheat in the western portion of this county. The Hartwell, Keach and Keeley levees broke Saturday and there are now about 3,000 acres of wheat and meadows under water in this county. Large herds of cattle have been driven to the hills and families are moving out.

CAHOKIA, Ill., May 16.—The embankment of the Conlogue Railroad Company, about 200 feet long, has given way and the town is flooded to the depth of several feet. No lives have been lost, but a large amount of damage has been done.

INDEPENDENCE, Ia., May 16.—Eight days' continuous rain and a cloudburst in the eastern part of the county caused four bridges to go out and the lowlands are flooded. A Danish family, consisting of the man, wife and child, attempted to cross a bridge just before it went down. The bridge gave way while they were on it and all were drowned. The damage to seed in the ground is enormous. Pine creek rose 7 feet in one hour.

NEW ORLEANS, May 16.—The situation along the Mississippi river south of Vicksburg continues to be serious and the outlook for the next two weeks is not promising. All the important levees in Louisiana are still holding, but in north Louisiana they are subjected to a very severe strain. The two breaks in Arkansas are widening rapidly and are now discharging something more than 150,000 gallons of water a second and the river below has been relieved temporarily of that much of its surplus. But this relief is only temporary so far as the Mississippi below the Red river is concerned and may yet prove disastrous for that portion of Louisiana lying between the Red and the Arkansas line. The water from these breaks is fast filling up the lowlands along the Bayou Macon, and will soon fill that stream and Bayou Tensas bank full. Should one of the levees along the north Louisiana front break after these streams and the surrounding streams are full the whole section will go under water with unparalleled rapidity and to an unusual depth.

Compelled to Stop Business.

The St. Paul German Accident Insurance Company has dropped out of existence by reinsuring all of its business with a New York company. This course was forced upon it by the failure of the Commercial bank, in which the company held $100,000 in stock, the value of which is just now problematical. The officers of the company say that all claims against it will be paid in full, and that no one will suffer any inconvenience through its reinsurance.

—Dr. Edward Everett Hale was asked the secret of keeping young at the age of seventy, and this was his reply: "First, never do anything yourself which you can get another to do for you; second, never trouble yourself as to who will get the credit for what is done; third, never work after three o'clock in the afternoon; fourth, sleep ten hours out of every twenty-four."

—The Baroness von Barnekow, of San Francisco, was until recently known as Ida Green, but the decision of the court in Berlin recently gave to this sixteen-year-old girl the title and accumulated wealth of the late Baron von Barnekow. She has bought for herself a $10,000 home, and there she will live for the next two years, after which she expects to visit her noble relations in Germany.

—A curious book, in which the text is neither written nor printed, but woven, has lately been published at Lyons. It is made of silk, and was published in twenty-five parts. Each part consists of two leaves, so that the entire volume only contains fifty leaves, inscribed with the service of the mass and several prayers. Both the letters and the border are in black silk on a white background.

—Mrs. Garner, the wife of R. L. Garner, aids her husband in the experiments he is making to learn whether animals have language. He makes valuable use of the phonograph, and he said the other evening, without apparent compunctions of conscience, that he had nearly exhausted his wife's lungs in getting her to laugh into the instrument so that he might compare the sounds with those produced by the monkey.

—The king of Italy has a perfect fancy for attending fires. The other evening he was due at the Germam embassy, where Count Solms gave a ball. Her majesty, Queen Margaret, radiant in a toilet of pale yellow silk, and dazzling with superb diamonds, came alone, and stated that his majesty the king had gone to a fire which had broken out at a manufactory of macaroni and Italian paste, and he remained at the scene until the flames were subdued.

—George Eliot has created a kind of novel in which she will have no successor, because we shall never see again the qualities of the thinker so combined with those of the artist. Here is the novel of moral analysis. There is her specialty, there her triumph. Story, description, reflection, dialogue—all in her writings—is auxiliary to the painting of the secret movements of the mind, to the study of the human conscience; while the minuteness of her observation never hurts either the vigorous realism of her writings, the personality of her creations or the passionate interest of her drama.—Emund Sherer.

—It is all owing to what a man is proud of. If he is proud of his honor and integrity, proud of his blameless life and his efforts to benefit his race, he is the right kind of a man. KNEW TOO MUCH.

A Smart Clerk Who Was Altogether Too Officious.

He was a daisy clerk in a dry goods store with a commercial smile and a stunning four-in-hand tie that made him look killing, and he was in his most elevated mood when a customer opened the day with a request for fans.

He looked her over. "Cheap," he said to himself as he noted the shawl and hood. Then he reached into the show-case and grabbed a lot of shop-worn Japanese fans and spread them on the counter.

"I was looking for something a little better," said the woman in a mild, deprecating voice. "I want——"

"I know what you want," interrupted the fresh young man, and taking down a box he disclosed a job lot of soiled silk fans with a feather edge. "These have been reduced from $1 to fifty cents to close out stock. Which color did you like best, pink or blue? They're a great bargain, ma'am."

"Young man," said the woman in the hood, solemnly, "shake hands! I thought I knew what I wanted, but I see I don't. I'm real glad to find some one who knows what I want better than I do myself. Pick me out the kind of fan you think I need, and I'll pay for it. You've taken a heap of responsibility off my shoulders."

There was a limp and crest-fallen young man behind that counter about that time and he looked so dejected that the good woman took pity on him, and selected a fan to suit herself—a process that deepened the chagrin of the know-it-all clerk, for she bought the finest fan he had, saying it was for her daughter's wedding. But she couldn't help showing that she enjoyed his discomfiture.—Detroit Free Press.

HIS SUNDAY CLOTHES.

Somethin' cur'ous in his air,
Sheepy look about his eyes;
Gone an' pompadoured his hair,
Got on one o' dad's best ties.
Wonder if he's goin' to town?
Prinked enough, the goodness knows!
Somethin's brewin', I'll be boun'—
John's got on his Sunday clo'es.

Washed his hands with extra care,
Shaved himself from ears to throat,
Curled his mustache, I declare!
Pinned a rosebud on his coat.
Face shines like the harvest moon,
Puttin' powder on his nose;
Somethin's bound to happen soon—
John's got on his Sunday clo'es.

Usual clo'es a suit of jean,
Hat a broad-brimmed wideawake,
Biggest boots was ever seen,
Hands worn hard by hoe and rake.
Now his shoes are shinin' black,
Small and narrer at the toes,
An' on Wednesday, cur'ous fac'!
John's got on his Sunday clo'es.

Pretty girl at Turtle Brook,
Daughter of Selectman Smith,
With a mild, angelic look
Fit to enter Heaven with;
Yellow hair and hazel eye,
Cheeks as red as any rose—
Guess she knows the reason why
John's got on his Sunday clo'es.
—N. Y. Sun.

SHE was going down in a street car. He was doing the same thing. They had never met before, and this could hardly be called a meeting, except as it became one later on. Up and down the car she glanced in a cursory way, taking a slightly critical notice of her fellow passengers, until she came to the "he" mentioned above. This was her inventory of his outward personal points: "What a tall, thin man! Rather smart looking, too, only he don't look exactly well poised. I guess he knows what nerves are. Am sorry for him, especially in this city of rush and worry and cool-headed competitors."

Then our little critic turned her attention to the "Nation" in her hand.

He took his turn at criticism, and summed her up in this manner: "Cool little body, that; I rather guess she wouldn't jump at a mouse. How comfortable she looks! little and plump and strong! I'll warrant she marches straight on through the world and knows what she is marching for, every time. How I hate my nervous system!"

And he turned his attention once more to his morning paper.

Gracious, what a jerk! And how those horses were rearing and plunging, as even street-car horses will, and keeping up the jerks!

Every man in the car sprang to his feet and helped to form a blockade in the doorway. Every woman sat still. I know you will think this is contrary to the usual order of things, but I was there, and know. It was only a balking, fractious horse, and the men slowly took to pieces the blockade and stood along in the car, stretching their necks to see how the matter would end. And where do you think our hero stood? On no less a place than our heroine's feet. Unconsciously, it is true, but without any abatement of weight for all his unconsciousness.

"Perhaps," she said, in a minute, in her cool way, "perhaps if you got off my feet and sat down, you wouldn't get hurt."

How he colored, stammered out his plea for pardon, and jumped aside with such alacrity that he knocked against another man, who stood as he had stood a minute before, only, with no feet under his own.

"Hello, Bob," was the exclamation that answered his knock. "Don't quite annihilate me!" and the next instant he lifted his hat with a courteous "Good morning, Miss Ronald," to our little heroine. Then he talked a minute with each, and at last said: "As you two are near neighbors, and old friends of mine, I think you should know each other. Miss Ronald, Mr. Waldo."

Both bowed; she with a sly twinkle in her eyes, and he with so red a blush that one did not think of noticing his eyes at all. That was the beginning, and a subject for meditation, in different ways, for both.

A few mornings later, as Miss Ronald was standing on her corner waiting for her car, Mr. Waldo came out of his boarding-house door for the same car.

"Good morning, Miss Ronald."

"The same to you," was the reply, "and it is a good morning, sure enough. One can hardly believe that there will be any more cold, dark mornings before summer."

They chatted pleasantly all the way down in the car that morning, and she found out that he was a lawyer with a good deal of worrying business on hand, and a too strongly sympathetic interest in his clients. He found out that she taught school; and he imagined he could see how coolly she did it. His imagination was not very wide of the mark.

She mildly insinuated that she took boys up by the nape of the neck and dropped them out of the window; and that she combed the girls' hair with the pointer, by way of gentlest modes of correction; but he felt free to doubt the literalness of her confession.

"If you think I could help you to pass an evening pleasantly, I should be glad to have you try it, any evening in my home," were the words with which she left him one morning, as the car stopped at her school corner.

"Thank you, I should be pleased to try," was his hearty response.

"Humph!" thought the mutual friend who had introduced them, "things are getting on! Well, he is a mighty nice fellow, and a steady, cool little body like Miss Ronald would help him march on to fame. I hope things will 'get on' a good deal farther."

But, somehow, they did not, very much farther. He called, not once, but many times; always had a pleasant evening; became familiar with her schoolroom gossip; learned her ideas of the events and people in the country at large, for she kept herself posted in an intelligent way; and he began to count strongly on the evenings thus spent.

When things reached this point, there they stood for weeks, away into the pleasant summer weather, through the change from parlor to front steps as visiting ground, through an occasional walk in the park, through moonlight rides behind the finest livery horses, and other prescribed methods of entertainment.

She was always pleasant, helped him to decide many a knotty point, appeared to like him, and always invited him to call again; but there was a something that kept things from coming to an issue.

When August came she went away for a few weeks to a delightful little lake in Wisconsin, whose charms she had acquainted herself with the summer before and related to him.

"Miss Ronald," he had said, on the evening before her departure, "do you think this pretty little place to which you are going would be anything of a rest to the brains of a certain tired lawyer we wot of?"

"I should think it would," she replied, "and they tell me September is the loveliest month of all the year to be there."

September! When she would be back in her hot schoolroom. He could imagine her there and himself stretched out on the cool grass, with the pretty little lake a few yards away, the cool breeze, the blue sky and all the other charming things she had talked of; only he felt sure that, stretched out in the midst of them all, he should see that schoolroom, with a very hot little school-mistress, and so many restless boys that needed dropping out of the window, and so many girls whose hair needed combing with the pointer, that it was hard to tell where to begin first, and so the teacher did not begin at all.

"I'll try it in September," was his response, as he dropped her hand with a "Good-by," and went home to meditate on what her words might, or might not mean, and to almost swear at the man who wrote the lines that would keep running in his mind, until sleep came, at a late, or, rather, early hour to banish them.

"'Tis sweet to love; but, oh, how bitter
To love a girl and then not git her!"

Miss Ronald went away. Inside of a week her friend had sent her a box of candy, a basket of assorted fruits, the daily papers, and began racking his brains to think what he could do next. Her pretty little note of thanks decided him. The thing he did do next was to send this note:

"Miss Ronald: Do you not think August is almost equal to September, or sufficiently so to have a good effect on the tired lawyer's brains?"

And she wrote back:

"Mr. Waldo: August seems to be doing very well and I hear we are to have a cold, wet fall The lawyer's brains may not be cold-water proof."

He thought so, too, and the next morning saw him traveling in search of sunshine, material and spiritual, and very hopeful of finding it.

How cool Miss Ronald looked as he drove up, hot and dusty, to the steps of the large house where summer board was dispensed for a weekly consideration. But her welcome was cordial. They went to ride that evening. He followed all the prettiest drives with her guidance, and a good many there were, too. It was quite late as they drove slowly homeward, and the horse went on so meekly that Mr. Waldo had quite a good opportunity for paying more attention to his companion than drivers usually do. He was much enjoying it when that meek horse suddenly gave a plunge to the side of the road. A firm hand in the reins and a few moments of good management quieted his fright. But what does this mean? Can Miss Ronald have changed temperaments with him awhile? How does it happen that she has a tight grasp on his arm and seems to be of a tremble?

No matter how it is, so long as it gives him a chance to put his arm around her and say: "It is all right now, dear, and I won't stand on your feet. Don't you think I have improved in thoughtfulness and courage, sufficiently, since that day we first met, to lead you to think I can take care of you always?"

She hesitated a long second, and said: "Robert, you shall prevent me from ever dropping another boy out of the window; and the girls' mothers must comb their hair, after this."—Juniata Stafford, in Housekeeper.

PINEAPPLE CLOTH.

A Costly Fabric of Great Delicacy and Beauty.

The first mention made of this delicious tropical fruit may be found in Evelyn's dairy, wherein he writes that it was brought from Barbadoes, and was esteemed a rare luxury at the table of Charles the Second.

More than this, for later years we read that one of the loveliest and thinnest of fabrics, called "pina-cloth," is made from the leaf fibers of the pine-apple plant. The threads of this dainty texture, both in warp and weft, are each single, unspun fibers, consequently only small pieces of the finest of these goods can be made, and narrow in width at that.

Of the coarser grades of this textile, end to end may be joined in neat fashion, and increase the length of warp threads, but only skillful hands can make such delicate connection. Pina-cloth is very strong, and the best specimens far exceed the finest lawns offered in market.

Ladies' handkerchiefs of this material are often richly embroidered in silk, thus becoming elegant and costly luxuries. Others have simply "independent borders" in pale tints—blue, pink or canary—a few shimmering threads that are extremely pretty additions; not unfrequently upon such one finds a finishing edge of narrow costly lace, thus enhancing the general effect, and they are in demand at Christmas and other holiday times for dainty feminine gifts.—Harper's Bazar.

—Hostess—"Ah, Miss Budd, let me introduce Sig. Barbini, the great artist." Miss Budd (enthusiastically)—"I am so glad to meet you. What is your specialty in drawing?" Sig. Barbini (of the opera)—"Crowds, signorina; crowds."—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—The Congregational week of self-denial in England has realized $10,000 for the London Missionary society.

—Following the example of India and Japan, the Siamese are about to establish a school for native girls of high rank under the management of English ladies.

—Chaplain McCabe is said to have made forty thousand dollars out of his lecture on Libby prison, all of which he has given to the Methodist church or to charity.

—The minister of education in Germany has passed a decree that the definite engagement of a schoolmistress ceases at the end of the school-year in which she marries.

—The incorporators of the new Congregational academy at Ashland, Wis., have decided to call for bids, and the corner-stone will be laid some time during the summer.

—During the last year about 60,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures were circulated in Germany. In Berlin there are 108 Sunday-schools, with 35,256 children and 1,715 teachers.

—The late Miss Julia Dickinson, a Michigan woman, left Oberlin college $40,000, one-half to endow the chair of lady principal, and the rest for the department of physical culture for women.

—Mrs. Shaw, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has given 30,000 to the trustees of Peabody museum (Harvard), to found a chair of archæology in memory of her husband, said chair to be filled by Miss Alice Fletcher, noted and honored for her studies in archæology.

—Timothy Hopkins has presented to Stanford university a valuable collection of books and pamphlets, all of them treating of various phases of railway interests. The bound volumes number 1,000, and an equal number of pamphlets was included in the gift.

—Mrs. Spurgeon has sent the following message to those who have offered their condolences on her husband's death: "All that was choice, generous, and Christ-like seemed to be gathered together in him and to be lived out in his life. The Lord granted us both three months of earthly happiness in Mentone before taking him away."

—Official reports state that between the years 1870 and 1887 the Russian Orthodox missionaries baptized 71,272 heathen, 8,597 Jews and 4,294 Mohammedans. From 1870 to 1877 the number of heathen converts increased steadily; since that this contingent grows less, while the number of Jewish converts increases and of Mohammedans vary.

—The Roman Catholic mission among the Dyaks of North Borneo has now eight stations with six hundred Christians. There are fourteen priests, two brothers and nine Franciscan sisters. The sisters have two convents where they instruct the girls and small boys. One of the missionaries, Rev. Thomas Jackson, is in this country seeking to arouse interest in the mission.—N. Y. Independent.

—The New York Normal college has a Slojd class, which the girls, who have made use of their opportunities to learn how to handle carpenter tools, pronounce a great success, and visitors to the class say that the tools are used with such grace and dexterity that it is a pleasure to be a looker-on. These girls also learn how to cook, and these two practical accomplishments do not in the least interfere with the brain furniture supplied by the "isms" and the "ologies."

BEGIN ANEW.

A Wise Woman's Observations on Uncompleted Work.

Every woman in America has just that much time. And nobody has any more. Twenty-four hours a day; that's all there is. Six working days a week; that's all you can get unless you steal from Sunday, and if your business requires you to steal either time or money, you'd better give it up and get into something with more honesty and less profit in it. What you can't finish this week postpone until next, or forever; and what sticks out over the end of a year saw off and put in the stove. Four seasons have passed and that's all there is. You must make a fresh start every year. It isn't an easy matter to learn how to do this, but you've got to learn it sometime, either before you die or when you die; why not learn early and get the good and the comfort of it? Every day of my life the evening is apt to find something on my programme that I haven't got to. I say, "Maybe I won't do that to-morrow," and as a rule I don't. I go to sleep and forget about it. Every year closes with uncompleted work on my hands, and that year ends that work. I'm not going to drag it along with me into a new year. I used to do that, so that about half the time I was working six weeks ago instead of to-day, and dragging, wearisome business it was. When you die there will be unfinished work and raveled-out plans on your hands. Then what are you going to do? Take it to Heaven with you and bother and drag along with it there? Not much you won't. Well, then, why not learn to drop some of it here? It is a lesson not so easily learned, but, once learned, it is more refreshing than a glass of cool milk to the lips of the man with the grip.—Ladies' Home Journal.

IN A COUNTRY STORE.

The Merchant Was Short on Shirts but Long on Overalls.

Some of the snow-bound passengers at one of the depots near here were telling stories the other day, and a traveling man was relating his experience in a country store in a small town in Jefferson county. He said he was there nearly the entire forenoon, and had occasion to note the peculiarities of the storekeeper, who carried a general stock, but a pretty small one. Every little while a customer would come into the store and inquire for some article that the merchant did not happen to have in stock. For instance: Have you any dried beef, Mr. Cashdrawer?" "No, we have no dried beef to-day, but we have some nice codfish. John, show this lady the codfish." "Do you keep any such thing as wicks for those big round lamp-burners?" "We generally do, but happen to be out just now. We have some fine cotton clotheslines, though. John, show the gentleman the clotheslines." "My gals wanted me to bring home some confectioner's sugar. Have you got any of it, Cashdrawer?" "Sold the last ounce about an hour ago, Henry. We've got an excellent quality of toilet soap, though. John, show Mr. Adams the soap." "Do you keep ready-made flannel skirts?" "Have had them all winter and sold three to a lady yesterday, which cleaned the stock out. But we have a large supply of overalls. John, show this lady the overalls."—Utica Observer.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Parsley is entirely effectual in removing the odor of onions after a meal. The green sprigs should be eaten as celery is, with the onions or with the potato salad, not left to be taken after dinner or supper.

—Sardine Sandwich: Remove the skin of half a dozen sardines, split and take out the bones. Spread stale slices of bread very thinly with butter, place on each two halves of the fish, squeeze a little lemon juice over them, add a crisp leaf of lettuce to each, and put a slice of buttered bread on top.—Boston Budget.

—Brown Sauce for Potato: Heat a pint of thin cream or rich milk, and when boiling add a half teaspoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of flour (which has been browned in the oven until of a nut-brown color) rubbed to a smooth paste with a little cold milk. Cook rapidly until thickened, then more slowly for five or ten minutes. Serve hot.—Good Health.

—A sponge large enough to expand and fill the chimney after having been squeezed in, is the best thing with which to clean a lamp chimney. Tie the sponge to a slender stick, and after once being put in, it need not be taken out until the chimney is thoroughly washed with soapsuds and rinsed, as fresh water can be constantly poured through the chimney.

—Whipped Cream Sauce: For any pudding, take one teacupful of sweet cream, whites of three eggs, three tablespoonfuls powdered sugar. Have the cream previously set on the ice to get chilled; whip the cream then, and return to a cool place. Beat the whites to a stiff foam, add the sugar, then the whipped cream, beating all together. This is very nice for fruit puddings or to serve with cake.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Sausage Meat: It pays well to have a meat-chopping machine among one's cooking utensils, if only to insure having fresh home-made sausage meat. The meat is made thus: One pound of chopped veal and the same of rather lean pork, mix together thoroughly, season with salt and pepper to taste; a little nutmeg, clove and cinnamon may be added if liked. The yolk of an egg to each pound of meat makes it richer.—N. Y. World.

—Most herbs that are grown in water are of no use the next season for flowering. The process of rooting them in water seems to have destroyed their vitality. We presume the Chinese lily follows this rule, and that it has been so exhausted by the process of flowering that it will not be likely to bloom another season. It will do no harm, however, to treat it with care when it is put away and try it another year. Let the water dry up around it gradually, pouring out a little, if necessary, and when the leaves have all dropped off, pack it away in sand.—N. Y. Tribune.

FASHIONS IN JEWELRY.

Beautiful Things That Are Now Much in Favor.

Ladies' vest chains are designed for the new fashions.

Padlock and key bracelets are always in demand for gifts of significance.

Buckles enameled similar to bow knots, in imitation of ribbons, have been introduced.

Cigar cutters for men of luxurious tastes are of gold, platinum, and set with precious stones.

Ear wires are of gold, and intended to hold earrings where the ears have not been pierced.

Slender rings with open heart-shaped forms in small stones and diamond knots are new designs in rings.

Black onyx hat-pins, round and pear-shaped, polished and unpolished, are provided for the different stages of mourning.

Sapphires round and oblong are seen in plain gold rimmed settings of dead gold. It is a quaint, old fashion and very distinguished.

In very formal society black enameled bangles are worn as complimentary mourning. Black enameled flowers are sometimes attached to these.

Gentlemen's vest-buttons come in sets of four, colored, chased, enameled and set with precious stones. Those made to order have the crest or monogram.

Metal bandeaux enameled to simulate black watered ribbon are worn in mourning. They are fastened on top by a bow knot. Fillets of jet and dull black are also worn.

Fob chains of onyx, unpolished and polished, are worn in mourning. Small sectional chains of onyx connected by gold links are very pretty, but are not worn in first mourning.

Tiaras have become almost common during the season. The Mary Stuart coif in gold network with pearls and diamonds is one model. An interesting tiara was made of large clouded pearls accenting forms described in small diamonds.—Jewelers' Circular.

FAT FOR FRYING.

Suet Is Preferable to Either Lard or Butter.

Now that the proper method of frying in deep fat is so generally practiced there is special interest taken in the variety of oils and fats now offered in market to succeed lard. For many reasons lard is objectionable. It leaves an unpleasant odor after it, which clings to the kitchen and may penetrate to the upper rooms. No fat leaves a more disagreeable odor. Suet is in every way to be preferred, but it is troublesome to try out, and can not be purchased like lard, already prepared for use. The drippings of roast meat and the fat taken off beef are really the very best fats that we have, but there is such a small amount of this in a family, even if every scrap of it were saved, that there could not be obtained any appreciable amount of it. A certain amount of beef suet must be tried out to go with it. To do this chop the suet fine, put it in an iron spider and let it melt out till it is perfectly transparent, but not till it burns. Then strain it through a pointed bag and put it aside for use. When very delicate frying is to be done, like eggs, and butter is usually employed, olive oil may be advantageously used, and the advantage is that it does not leave any black stain on the eggs like butter. It is too expensive to be used in the quantity, and it can not be as thoroughly depended upon as animal fats, as it is more likely to boil over. The writer has had no experience with the form of cottonseed oil which is now being extensively introduced under the name of cottolene, but ordinary cottonseed oil, such as has been used in southern kitchens for some time, leaves an odor even more disageeable than that of lard, and an unpleasant coating of the fat over the article fried.—N. Y. Tribune.

A PROFITABLE TALK.

Our Special Reporter Secures the Facts.

He Determined to Thoroughly Investigate a Subject That Is Causing Much Comment, and He Has Succeeded.

[N. Y. Sun.]

Two days ago one of the most prominent professional men in New York published a letter so outspoken, so unusual as to cause extensive talk and awaken much comment. Yesterday I interviewed the gentleman as to the contents of the letter, and he fully confirmed it in every respect. He not only did this but he also mentioned a number of unusual cases which had come under his observation in which little less than a miracle had been performed.

So important has the entire subject become that I determined to investigate it to the bottom, and accordingly called upon Mr. Albert G. Eaves, the prominent costumer at No. 63 East Twelfth street, the gentleman mentioned in my interview with the doctor yesterday. Mr. Eaves has made quite a name. A complete knowledge of history, an appreciation of art and reliability are essential in his profession.

"Mr. Eaves," I said, "I learn that your wife has had a most unusual experience; are you willing to describe it?"

The gentleman thought a moment and an expression of pleasure passed over his face. "When I think," he said, "of what my wife once passed through and the condition she is in to-day, I cannot but feel gratitude. Nearly three years ago she was at the point of death. You can understand how sick she was when I say she was totally blind and lay in a state of unconsciousness. Three doctors attended her and all agreed that her death was only a question of hours, perhaps minutes."

"May I ask what the doctors called her trouble?"

"Uraemia and puerperal convulsions, so you can imagine how badly she must have been. At last one doctor (it was Dr. R. A. Gunn) said that as she was still able to swallow one more attempt might be made and a medicine was accordingly given her. She seemed to improve at once; in a few days her sight was restored. 'I have had a long, long sleep,' she said, upon recovering consciousness, and I am rejoiced to say that she was restored to perfect health wholly through the use of Warner's Safe Cure, which was the remedy we administered when she was past all consciousness."

I looked at Mr. Evans as he said this. His face was beaming with satisfaction. He continued:

"The physicians told us, after my wife's recovery, that she could never endure childbirth, and yet we have a fine boy nearly a year old, and do not know what sickness is. I attribute it all to the wonderful power of Warner's Safe Cure. Why, my sister, who resides in Virginia, was, a while ago, afflicted precisely as my wife had been. I at once advised her to use this same great remedy; it cured her promptly."

"You find that it is specially adapted for women, do you?" I inquired.

"By no means. I have known it to be wonderful in its power in the case of gentlemen to whom I have recommended it. I speak from my experience entirely, and you should not be surprised that I am so firm a believer in this discovery, which has done so much for me."

I was not surprised. I saw by every word, by every look, that Mr. Eaves meant all he said. I had ample confirmation of Dr. Gunn's letter and interview, and I do not wonder that people who have seen such things, who have watched their dearest friends go down into the dark valley and be brought back into the light, should be both enthusiastic and grateful. I, myself, caught the spirit, and I shall be glad if the investigations I have made prove of profit to those who may read them.

Gold Filling for False Teeth.

"Funny business this," remarked a dentist, turning from his work bench and addressing the reporter. "What?" "Filling false teeth. Every now and then, when we make a set of false teeth, we are asked to fill two or three of the front ones, so that the gold when the wearer smiles, will shine like a darkey's heel. This takes away the counterfeit appearance of the teeth to some extent. It's a counterfeit upon a counterfeit. Persons who have this kind of work are willing to pay for it, and as they always want a good showing of gold, and are very particular as to the appearance of the work, we have to charge well for it. Somehow I don't like to do it. When we have made counterfeit teeth it always seems to me that the deception has gone far enough.—Indianapolis Journal.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—We are paying 12cts. cash for eggs. Delano Produce Co.

—The Ladies of the M. E. church request us to say that they will hold a strawberry and ice cream festival at the City Hall on Thursday evening May 26.

—Baron VonKruger visited Waverly on Wednesday to set up a newfangled beer pump for drawing the beer from the cellar for one of the saloon keepers of that village.

—John Lohmiller claims to have disposed of three carloads of beer this month and expects to sell three car loads more before the month is up. Somebody must like beer.

—Charley Conzet is mistaken about the little shavers having whiskers. They are too young for that luxury. That old pacer can go all the same and most everybody in town knows it by personal observation.

—Horace Mann and Emil Wiese took a skiff and being a leaky one it began to fill with water and Emil getting frightened jumped out and took a bath finally both reached shore in safety. Let people's boats alone boys.

—F. F. Chancellor informs us that S. J. Cooper has finally succeeded in drowning a horse at Wright's Ford where the new bridge was to be built The river is too high for fording now. It is said to have raised 18 inches last night and is still on the rise.

—Vote for the refunding of the school debt at 5 percent for 5 to 15 years it is likely that is as well as we can do. When you get in a fix get out the best way you can that is honest, and in the absence of the "sinking fund" this would seem to be the best thing that can be done.

—We are in receipt of a boom edition of the Cumberland Advocate, of Wisconsin. A familiar face among the pictures of the prominent business men of the place is that of J. F. Miller a former Delanoite. One of the finest dwellings represented is labeled as belonging to the same gentleman.

—Our esteemed fellow townsman who has been clerking for Wells Bros. of Herman, for a few months past has left his position in charge of his brother, M. C., who will relieve him while he is engaged in getting married and taking a wedding tour to the Pacific Coast in company with Mrs. Johnny Plattner with whom he expects to start out over life's journey on or about June 1st.

—Albert Johnson is about completing a fine centre table which is a novelty in its way; the top is inlaid in ten different kinds of wood and contains 227 pieces. He says the time required to make an article of the kind would amount to near $50. Albert is an expert at this kind of work having made several articles of different kinds before. He stands a good chance of taking the cake at the World's Fair with a center table with a piece of wood of every variety in the State of Minnesota.

—Instead of informing the people of the Delano Independent School District as to what has become of the "sinking fund" which we are now paying tax for at the rate of 7 mills on the dollar while paying 8 mills on the dollar for all other school purposes the noble old bird pounces on to a former board and tries to hide her editor's official acts on the school board behind trumped up charges against someone else. Inkfish fashion blackening the waters to hide from view. Tell the folks what has become of the promises to have but $300. due at the end of the present year instead of asking the "hoodlums" etc. etc., to vote $10,000.00 bonds now. Can't you explain your own actions as well as to concoct stories about others?

—The Board of Education of Delano met in the council room and held a meeting on Saturday evening. A motion to hire an assistant principal was made and after considerable warm debate the question was put with ayes Cunningham, Maxfield and Erickson; nayes Gutzwiller, Brasie and President Ingerson. It seems that people with children who attend school favor a principal that can look after the interests of the school and not be confined to one room and are willing to hire an assistant so that the principal can attend to a few of the higher branches a portion of his time and devote the balance to aiding in the other rooms, while the three members on the board who have no children to attend school appear to have the financial rather than the educational view of the matter uppermost in their hearts.

—Yes we do. We pay cash for eggs. C. H. Green & Co. 33-3t.

—"The Tramp's Daughter" at the City Hall, Wednesday evening, June 1.

—Rev. A. W Wright will preach at the Presbyterian church at the usual hour, 3 P. M., Sabbath.

Com. on buildings to repair City Hall.

Council voted to donate $125.00 for 4th of July.

School Board Ideas.

The disputed motion made at Saturday evening school board meeting was "I move that we elect an assistant to the principal" and was made by John Cunningham and seconded by L. M. Maxfield. Our proposition would have cost the district but $45. per year as we proposed reducing the length of the term one month. The Eagle calls this a pet scheme. A short time ago I. Gutzwiller, Jr. proposed to have Miss Kissing, a St. Paul lady, to give vocal music lessons on Saturdays at the school house and pay her $12. per month out of the district's funds donating the rent and allowing grown people to attend. His vote was alone in favor of this. Was not this a pet scheme?

A MEMBER OF THE BOARD.

Principal	$12,000.00
Interest for 10 years	8,000.00
Principal	10,000.00
Interest for 15 years	7,500.00

Making a total of interest paid in 25 years $15,900.00 and by reducing the principal in the same ratio as has been done in the past 10 years there will be a debt of $6,000.00 yet due or not paid.

ANOTHER MEMBER OF THE BOARD.

One member of the School Board at Saturday evening's meeting used as an argument that "boys go to school here for ten years and can't keep books for a peanut stand."

Some of the board thought it not necessary to write answers to inquirers about vacancies for teachers as there was already too many applications on hand. Is it not the duty of the board to receive and examine all the applications they can get? We have heard of but one instance this year of offering to assist a teacher to a position if the teacher's father would do thus and so.

FROM THE EVERGREEN STATE.

BY REV. W. H. WILSON,

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE.—The storm king has received a gentle rebuke from the soft breath of May, which gives us back our delightful early summer. The earth carpeted with the most beautiful and fragrant flowers, lends an enchantment to the lands west of the Rockies. We have been in Washington now two years and have never regretted our coming. Our pastorate in our present appointment has been blessed and fruitful. Many have turned to the Lord and have been saved and the end is not yet. We attended the Convention of the I. O. O. F. at Seattle April 24 and 25 which was one of the most enjoyable occasions of our life. Something like six thousand Odd Fellows and Rebeccahs were present. Seattle knows how to treat visitors. The mayor of the city made the welcome address in Cordreas Theater building. Among other things he said, "Brothers of the friendly order, we welcome you to the City of the Sound. To you we open our houses, our homes. Seattle is yours as long as this convention lasts. Take her, use her as your own." And strange to say, you might walk from Front street to Third and Pike without seeing a policeman; they were nearly all off duty and there were fewer arrests on that day than any day in the year. So much for the order of Friendship, Love and Truth. One of the most blessed seasons we have enjoyed on the coast was spent with Rev. J. L. Parmeter, pastor of Crescent Harbor charge. Almost everyone will remember "Jack," as he was known in Minnesota. We are thankful to God for raising up just such men for his own work, not afraid of hardship, not afraid of work, esteeming it a blessed privilege to carry the glad news of a risen Christ to the wayward sons of earth putting his strong brotherly arm around the indifferent and whispering words of eternal life through Jesus, our Elder Brother. With all our family we were made welcome by the good people of Bro. Parmeter's charge, and especially so by the Reverend and his wife, who we found in the very heart of hard Christian work; looking after every interest of their by no means small work. Bro. Parmeter has by the help of God and the heroic efforts of a true and loyal people built and completed one of the neatest little parsonages in the New Whatcom district with all the buildings needed including a good barn, a hen house and pig pen. The work that young man has done in six or seven months would do credit to a much older pastor than he. We visited Miller's point and traveled out on to the most delightful peninsula we ever saw. Laying out in the straits about three quarters of a mile from land and reached by a spit, covered with shells and drift logs; here we should like to make our nest, (if any place more than another in the world) but we are not ready to settle down just yet for we must yet battle on for the Lord, waging war against wrong until the day star of hope shall arrive in the hearts of as many as our God shall give unto us for our hire. After visiting point Miller we were driven to the prune and pear orchard farm of Messrs. Cook & Waldo where the table looked very tempting and was enjoyed to the fullest extent for fully a half hour. This visit to the Cook & Waldo farm will long be remembered. On this farm one may cast the eye as you face the sound to the right and left and see prune, apple and pear orchard. They have a prune dryer where they manufacture the best grade of large purple prunes for the general trade. Just as the shades of evening began to gather we were whirled away again to the farm residence of Major General Holler. The road ran along the sound near enough to the beach that one could hear the waves of the restless tide as undisputed it rolled on as if angry that it could not leap over the dike and irrigate the large wheat and oat fields just out of reach with the music of the salt water and the song of the birds and bleating of the sheep, for large flocks of them were feeding on the tide flats beyond. Reminded us of the comfort Abraham must have taken with Isaac and Jacob on the plains of Mamre. There is nothing more delightful than a sun setting in the west. Just at this time the glory of the universe was about to bid adieu to earth for the night. It almost seemed that one could hear the sweet words:

I to my rest must go
Fair western land,
Rest thou while I am gone,
In God's great hand.

When morning doth appear
I shall arise,
On earth the children dear,
Hail, with glad surprise.

I then shall reign supreme,
Go thou to rest,
God give thee pleasant dreams,
Peace fill thy breast.

—By A. F. W.

Then kissing hill and vale, flower and creature, it still lingered a firm short moment, dancing in its own beautiful perfect light, then bowing gracefully it disappeared behind the snow capped hills of the far west and left us in the glorious May night twilight. Everything was done at the Holler Ranch to make our visit pleasant. After looking over the blooded stock and orchard and natural spring with other things of interest. We were entertained for a while by the Klina Kaizer, who had traveled all over the old and new world; one could not mention a place but what he had been there and judging from the looks of the meat platter at supper that evening I should think he had been into Turkey and come out all over GREASE. The sun shone into our window the next morning about eight reminding us that we had engaged to attend a picnic on the West Beach, just above Deception pass and overlooking Smith's Island on which is situated the Government light house. After a luscious breakfast and a word of prayer for the blessing of God upon the day we were on the road once again. Nothing of any note took place or was noticed on the trip but some Siwash Indians cutting out a canoe on the bank of the sound near the little station of Oak Harbor. The ride, the pleasant company and the picnic dinder spread out on the beach were the features of the day. When Sabbath morning came Bro. Parmeter invited me to preach which I did to a full church, using rhe text, "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is yet day, the night cometh when no man can work." Everything was favorable, God was there and we were blest. After the sermon we gave the right hand of fellowship to five persons who came seeking communion with our beloved church and so the work moves on.

Readers of the GAZETTE, though in this land of flowers and clams, yet I have a desire to see the friendly faces of those in other lands and it may be such a thing will come to pass at the time of the World's Fair.

The different Epworth Leagues of the New Whatcom District will hold a convention at Coupeville in June after which time if the readers of the GAZETTE and the editor so desire we will come again.

Meantime adieu,
REV. W. H. WILSON,
Pastor Coupeville,
Wash.

"A YARD OF PANSIES".

Now is your chance! "A Yard of Pansies," an exquisit oil-picture, a companion to "A yard of Roses," which has been so universally admired, is given, free of cost, as a souvenir with every copy of DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for June. "A yard of Pansies" was painted by the same noted artist, V. Janus, who painted the "Roses," but competent art-critics pronounce the "pansies" to be superior to the "Roses." "A yard of pansies" was painted to order at a cost of $300, and the reproduction, which is given with each Magazine, is in every respect equal to the original. And this is only one of the many notable features that make the June number the best one ever issued. The first article, "Mammoth Cave by Flash-Light," is the finest one ever published on the subject, and is illustrated by over a score of superb pictures,—pictures of places that have never before been photographed, so that one may become familiar with the wonders and beauties of this marvelous place without incurring the fatigue and expense of a personal visit. "The Queen of Flowers" is a charming article about the rose, with illustrations of all the fashionable varieties, actual size. "A Panoramic View of Existing Religions," by Rev. Carlos Martyn, will interest everybody, and explain many points of likeness and difference between religious beliefs of the present day. Sergeant Dunn of the U. S. Weather Bureau at New York has a splendid illustrated article, "How the Weather is Forecast." All who have dabbled in photography will enjoy the humor of "A successful Failure" and the accompanying pictures. Then there are excellent stories, every department is overflowing with good things, and there are about 250 illustations, including a fullpage portrait of the publisher. And this June number costs only the usual price, 20 cents. The subscription price is $2 a year. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East 14th St., New York.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

Tariff is a Tax. Grover Cleveland says so.

Tariff is a Tax. Thomas Wilson says so.

Tariff is a Tax. The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

FOR Governo., Dan W. Lawler That name at the head of a ticket would poll thousands of votes of good men who want to vote for an honest, upright man.—St. Peter Herald.

Doc. Fish's Challenge Accepted.

From the St. Peter Herald we clip an article which may be of interest to many. As Judge Cox is an able man and Doc. Fish a lightning talker it will furnish fun for the crowd sure, in case the debate comes off.

During the alliance institute held here last week, Doc. Fish made a sweeping challenge for a joint debate upon the issues of the day and principally upon the question of leaving the old party and joining the new. The challenge was to any one who chose to accept it and before it was fairly out of his mouth it was accepted by E. St. Julien Cox, whose letter follows below. Mr. Fish was somewhat taken back but up to date he has not backed up his challenge and while here, paid no futher attention to it. It is easy enough to issue challenges, if the matter is to end there. It is the general impression that Judge Cox unhorsed or at least worried Mr. Fish completely by the little surprise. Here is the Judge's letter:

ST. PETER, Minn May 13th, '92.

In the course of your meeting yesterday, you issued a rather sweeping challenge to all, to anyone present or absent, and in ringing tones offered to meet anyone in debate on the PRINCIPLES of the Peoples'—Alliance party, and particularly why the voter should leave the old parties. There is scarcely a foothold for me, as a Democrat, to accept such a challenge, or contest a major portion of your platform utterances, for whithin the lines of the Democracy for 40 years, I have advocated, in my limited sphere, and in official capacity supported measures of a great deal more practical importance to the toiling wage earner than I discern in any of the numerous platforms of the Peoples party. Nay, I will say, I have not read or heard a single plausible reason advanced by your newspaper organs, or public speakers why any sensible man should leave the "conservative" Democracy to ally himself with an experiment not yet proving itself above the suspicion of Boss-ism, or a hankering after the flesh pots, the loaves and fishes of the political scullery. But on those propositions, alluded to in your challenge, I will very "feebly in effort, tho'mighty in spirit" accept the gage of battle.

1st. That the tariff should be a Democratic Tariff for revenue only and that this always has been, is and always must be the most serious subject for the consideration of the American people, and is the doctrine and always has been of the Democracy.

2nd. Pardon me. On the silver question I failed in understanding your position yesterday, owing to the bad accoustic properties of the hall perhaps (?) whether you favor remonitization of silver with free and unlimited coinage, or demonitized silver, silver as it now is, with free and unlimited coinage. On this point, I will take either side; I don't care. It is a purely local, sectional question, surreptitiously crawling into party political principles.

3rd That there is not and can not be a single reason advanced, worthy of an intelligent citizen, why he should leave the Democratic party and join himself unto the People's party for political reasons.

I am to have the affirmative of both of these propositions. There must be three evening meetings, alternate speaking. Commencing to-night, next week, next month or any time before election.

If at St. Peter, I will furnish the hall, pay your expenses, provide a band and perhaps fun for you.

I am very respectfully,
E. ST. JULIEN COX.

To E. W. FISH,

King Alcohol Vanquished.

ROCKFORD, May 23, 1892.

MR. EDITOR.—Thinking that some of the many readers of the ever welcome GAZETTE would like to hear a few words from me, I have concluded to write you a few lines for publication.

Know ye this my dear readers that I once was a noted alcohol drinker, a graduate in that line. I have run races wrestled with, and had many a tumble with that old demon alcohol for the past thirty years. Invariably he would outwind me and win the contest. Now Mr. Editor you know as well as I do a man does not like to be beat always. I do not; therefore I made up my mind to try and find some weapon that that demon could not break down in my hands. Thank God I found the armor of faith, and the sword called Neuro Tector, which he could not withstand. Know ye then my friends that I have conquered that old devil alcohol and he will shun my path after this. It was a hard fought battle and waged for over thirty days. I do not think General Alcohol can get his troops together again in sufficient numbers to attack me again, so completely were they routed. I drove in his pickets, Beer, Wine and Cider; stormed his battery, Brandy; captured the first, second and third corps commanded by Generals Whisky, Rum and Gin. I plunged my sword (Neuro Tecton) through their haughty chief Gen. Alcohol and captured their colors, Drunkeness and Death.

Mr. Editor and friends, today I have no more a taste for anything that has alcohol in it than I had when I was a boy. The smell of it is disgusting to me now. I do not hanker for or think of it any more. It had a fearful hold on me a few weeks since as many of you know. I would have to commence as a little child to form a new appetite again to ever like it. Oh! that Neuro Tecton treatment is a wonderful cure. A man does not give up drinking by his own will. Oh no, no. If he submits to the cure the appetite is destroyed, in other words the appetite is taken from him, when and how he knows not. I claim that alcoholism is a disease brought on by the force of habit. The saying is true in this disease, (alcohol is a poison in overdoses,) it takes a poison to destroy a poison. The poison is injected into the system and destroys the alcoholic poison and the disease is cured.

Alcohol taken into the stomach after a few days under this treatment becomes an emetic and the stomach rejects it. A man is more than a fool that will grasp a red hot iron when he knows that it will burn him. He is more than a fool to like anything that he knows will drag him down to ruin and hell. There is many a man that would give all he has in this world to be rid of the terrible misery caused by alcohol. To all such I would say, There Salvation is sure. It will cost but a trifle in comparison to their troubles. Oh! the misery and torture, the degredation, loss of money and friends, the falling off of business and many other troubles one passes through while one is suffering with that disease, Alcoholism.

Now my friends I know the way and the sure cure and beg of any of my friends who are drifting down the stream of destruction to turn toward the shore and a lifeboat awaits them.

I now feel happy and free, have been born again. I feel 20 years younger and am strong and ready to work for the good of my fellow men as when I was young.

Your friend and well wisher,
C. B. AMES, M. D.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Crow River Valley.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

4TH OF JULY CELEBRATIONS.

We are in receipt of a letter from Hon. Thomas R. Briggs, of Howard Lake, giving his recollections of pioneer 4ths of July at Greenwood and which we give below. [Ed.]

HOWARD LAKE, May 23, '92.

EDITOR OF BUFFALO GAZETTE.

Noticing in your paper some "Historical Facts" of pioneer days in the Crow River Valley. Please allow me just a word. In 1857 the 4th of July was celebrated at Greenwood on the banks of Crow River in a beautiful little grove then belonging to Samuel Allen. On that occasion A. S. Lindsley was orator of the day and Capt. John B. Edgar chaplain. A. G. Sexton delivered the oration of Patrick Henry, and I think I had something to do as general manager. The next celebration at Greenwood was held in the grove south of the Beaver House. John B. King was orator of the day, T. R. Briggs read the Declaration of Independence, the singing was conducted by the Matter brothers, of Delano, assisted by their Catholic priest. It was in 1861 but Mr. Lindsley did not read the Declaration of Independence nor did Dana E. King orate on that occasion but John B. King, the brother of Wm. S. King was the orator.

Respectfully Yours,
THOS. R. BRIGGS.

The following is the letter from A. G. Sexton which goes extensively into details as to the matter:

MINNEHAHA, May 6th 1892.

In the Delano Eagle of May 5th '92, the Rockford correspondent writes as follows: "The 'Historical Facts' as published in the GAZETTE last week are a little off facts and a little on fiction. The story is very well told however and just as good as facts, but is not historical. The first celebration held in the Crow River Valley was held at Rockford on July 5th 1859. The celebration at Greenwood, the only one ever held there was on July 4th, 1860 (not 1856), etc." The Rockford correspondent is mistaken in relation to there having been but one 4th of July celebration at Greenwood prior to 1860. Greenwood celebrated the 4th of July 1858, also July 4th 1859. On the former occasion Rew or Rhew delivered the oration: on the latter F. C. Lindsley delivered the oration, the writer read the Declaration and Capt. John Edgar acted as chaplain. Does not the Rockford correspondent recollect that when Rockford held its celebration in 1859 that Greenwood also held one and the rivalry was so strong between the towns that it caused at the time some ill feeling towards each other which has been often regretted and long since forgotten. There are two little episodes that makes me remember July 4th 1859. I was to furnish meat for the 4th of July dinner, (which I did by furnishing a deer and a sand hill crane) and read the Declaration of Independence. Now in those days a buckskin coat and leggings and moccasins of the same material was the heigth of my ambition and my friends thinking that such was not suitable for so great an occasion each contributed different pieces of wearing apparel (for I had none of my own) such as pants, coat, vest, etc. to make me more presentable, which were brought to me a short time before I was to appear to read. Among the rest of the articles brought was a garment that I had never seen before or the like since, for I am a bachelor. It was made of the finest linen and was as white as snow and as sweet as the breath of the morning; the sleeves were not more than five or six inches long and was bordered with the dantiest little frills of lace as was also the neck and bottom of the skirts. I did not know what to do. It was almost time to commence the exercises. From the looks of the thing it was made to be worn so I whacked it on. In some places it was a tight fit but I noticed there was plenty of room around my chest.

In longitude though sorely scanty,
It was my best and I was vanity.

After the performance was over a married man came to me and reposing confidence in my discretion told me that in the hurry in the morning a mistake had been made and the wrong garment had been sent me and that there would be a dance in the evening and the garment was needed. Whether it was worn in the evening to the ball I deem need not become a historical fact. At dinner we had wine and through mistake I drank two wine glasses of a French preparation, prepared for an appetiser and a conflict commenced between it and the cornjuice with which I was already fairly well supplied. The reports of the rapid firing of the French Maitrailluse, the American Hotchkiss or Gatling guns is childs play to the popping, snapping and cracking that was going on in my head when the cornjuice and French drink opened their batteries. Of course no one man could stand such a fire and I became unconscious and when I came to my senses William McKinley, Esq., now of the town of Franklin and William Gould, (now deceased) of Greenwood were tugging and pulling to get me out of the straw pile and dung heap of the old Beaver House, where I was reposing my noble brow and manly form soaking in the sunshine. My impressions are that when Mr. King delivered his oration at Greenwood was in the year 1861 after the late rebellion had commenced. Ask the Rockford correspondent if I am not correct. I am sure that Greenwood held three different 4th of July celebrations and am not certain but it held four.

A. G. SEXTON.

These statements from old settlers agree that the circumstance referred to in the issue of the GAZETTE of April 29th took place differing only as to the year of its occurrence, all showing that there was more than one 4th of July celebration held at Greenwood and that several were held previous to 1860 and in further confirmation of the latter fact the following item from "The Falls Evening News" of July 23, 1859 is here presented, viz:

"☞We regret that we have received from our kind friend at Greenwood a full report of the "Doin's of the Fourth" so late that the patriotic interest in that holiday has about subsided, and we doubt if the publication of it at this hour would "pay". Won't 'Plu' favor us again." The "Falls Evening News", a tri-weekly, and the "State News", a weekly, were periodicals edited and published by W. A. Croffut and Edwin Clark at St. Anthony and Minneapolis during the closing years of the fifties and the first years of the sixties.

In regard to the celebration of 1861 at Greenwood of which A. G. Sexton in his letter makes mention, J. F. Powers says that it occured in 1861 and it was the greatest celebration of the "Big Woods" up to that time, that the Rev. John B. King, of New York and brother of Hons. W. S. and Dana E. King, delivered a very eloquent address and that the ladies fed over 300 people.

The following local from the "State Atlas" of July 3, 1861 may throw some light as to the Rev. John B. King being in the state at that time:

"Rev. J. B. King will preach in the Freewill Baptist church next Sabbath at 10 1-2 o'clock A. M."

The State Atlas was a weekly published in Minneapolis at that time by Hon. W. S. King.

The next issue of the State Atlas, July 10, 1861, the one supposed to contain reports of 4th of July celebrations for that year, was missing from the files examined by the writer.

In examining the files of the "Falls Evening News" the writer found another item of interest which is here presented only as a matter of historical interest to the old settlers of Crow River Valley, being in the issue of that paper of July 21, 1860, viz:

"☞A correspondent at Rockford writes us:

"——The 4th passed off quietly all appearing to enjoy themselves. The Sabbath School Celebration was also a splendid affair. And the entertainment at D. R. Farnham's, mine host of the Rockport House, the beauty and sparkling wit and repartee displayed, the joyous hilarity would have done your eyes good Mr. Editor. There were forty couples at Farnham's.

N. B. Rockford is good for old Abe for 25 majority."

Martin Conzet, Esq., of Greenwood alluding to the early celebrations says: "The 4th of July was not then as now celebrated in the spread eagle style with brass bands and imported speakers and politicians fishing for popularity. You would however see then that the day was celebrated as Independence Day, each feeling to be the equal to the other. Yes there was more real true patriotism exhibited than there has been of late years."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1892.

Mr. Blaine is not playing the role of a political sphinx for fun. He has a purpose in exhibiting himself every day where he knows his appearance will be commended upon, and while he refuses to talk about the republican nomination further than to say he doesen't want it, he tells every one who calls upon him that he feels stronger than at any time for ten years past, and that his health is perfect. There is no doubt that his health has greatly improved recently; that is plain to all who see him, and there is good ground for the suspicion that he is perfectly willing now to accept the nomination if he can get it without saying beforehand that he wishes it. His health is not the only reason for this change of mind. Mrs. Blaine, whose wishes always exercise a powerful influence over him, has, it is said, made up her mind that she wants him to accept the nomination, just to keep it away from Mr. Harrison, whose wife she wishes to humble because of some real or fancied slight. The philosopher who said "a woman is at the bottom of everything" was not far out of the way. Senator Hill regards the death of Barbour as a heavy blow to his Presidential prospects, as it was undoubtedly to the party at large.

A number of prominent artists, here in attendence upon the first annual meeting of the National Art Association, urged the Ways and Means committee of the House and the Finance committee of the Senate to report a bill repealing the duty on works of art.

The attempt to tack a free coinage amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, in the House, was a failure. The chair Representative Lester of Georgia ruled them out on points of order, and on appeal the House sustained the chair.

The House adopted the resolution offered by Representative Boatner, calling on the Attorney General for information as to what action, if any his office had taken toward ascertaining whether the recent Reading railroad combine had violated the anti-trust law. The frequency with which resolutions of this sort have of late been fired at the Attorney General will probably convince that offical that the able democratic lawers of the House are carefully watching his office, and that more than a mere pretence of fighting the trusts is required.

True to the policy of the republican party in legislating for favored classes, Senator Chandler introduced a bill authorizing Austin Cordin and his associates, who propose forming a steamship company, to obtain American registry for all vessels of 7,000 or more tons, having a speed of not less than nineteen knots an hour, which may come to their possession by purchase or otherwise, provided: that the said company shall contract to have built one vessel, in an American navy yard. Why should this favor be granted to millionaire Corbin and his associates and denied to others? When this bill gets to the House an attempt will be made to amend it by striking out the names and granting the privileges named in the bill to any citizen or citizens who wish to have them on the terms proposed.

Some alarm has been created among the republicans who have been doing lots of shouting about the successful manner in which the administration had secured acceptances from Germany, Great Britain, Austria Hungary and Italy to take part in the proposed international monetary conference, by official letter from the State department informing Secretary Foster, in answer to an inquiry, that not a single acceptance had yet been received from any of the countries to which invitations were sent. Anti-Harrison republicans are charging that misleading information has been purposely given out to help Mr. Harrison secure the nomination.

Secretary Foster now wishes he had not been so precipitate in writing that the work on the immigrant station on Ellis Island would remain a monument to wisdom long after the criticism that had assailed it had passed from the public mind. The chairmen of the House and Senate immigration Committees have sent a letter to the Secretary, from which the following is extracted: "We suggest that immediate repairs and strengthening of the main support to the upper floor of the main building at Ellis Island be made, in the interest of humanity, otherwise the building will not last until the end the present investigation, and it will be attended by a great loss of life and distruction of property. Queer sort of a monument to wisdom.

More than a fourth of the gold and more than a third of the silver produced throughout the world in the year 1891 were mined in the United States.

The gastronomic law that oysters should not be eaten in the months without an "r" in them was laid down by a person named Butler nearly three hundred years ago.

The Salvation Army believes in the use of printer's ink. It publishes thirty-one weekly newspapers and five monthly magazines, with a total annual circulation of 45,000,000 copies.

Prof. Riley, United States ethnologist, says that grasshoppers fried in butter taste very much like shrimps. So far as the "spring" in them is concerned they ought to taste like young and tender chickens.

An eastern firm advertises for a number of ladies with unusually long hair, promising them permanent positions at a good salary. This indicates that another infallible hair restorative is about to be put on the market.

An old maid's insurance company has been opened in Denmark. Spinsters can insure themselves by a small sum on reaching the age of thirteen, and, if still unmarried at forty, are entitled to a regular allowance. If they marry, however, they forfeit all claims.

American corn is making its way rapidly into the affections of the European heart and stomach as an article of army food. They do not take it clear yet, but mix it with barley meal. They say that the barley improves the corn, and that the corn improves the barley. America will win its way against all the world.

The oldest American naval officers of rank are: Commodore Henry Bruce, born in 1798, entered the service in 1813; Rear Admiral Sellridge, born in 1804, entered the service in 1818; Commodore Samuel Lockwood, born in 1803, entered the service in 1820; Rear Admiral Samuel P. Lee, born in 1812, entered the service in 1825.

Tradition says that three hundred and fifty years ago De Soto stood on the banks of the Mississippi river near where Memphis is now built and looked across the yellow waters. Now the railroad trains cross the river at the same place on a new steel bridge which cost $3,000,000. Tradition cannot hold a candle to facts in this country.

There is a remarkable tendency toward originality in suicide just now. One man harnessed a team to his neck and had his head pulled off. But he was outdone by the man who accomplished his taking off by choking himself with smoked beef. The amount of inventive genius and determination necessary for the adoption of methods so desperate would surely achieve success in any field more worthy of such enterprise.

The old state house at Kingston, N. Y., in which the state constitution was framed and adopted, is now open for visitors, with Marius Schoonmaker employed by the state as keeper. Among the curiosities already displayed within its walls are a flax wheel used by Teunis Swart's wife in 1787 and a dresser two hundred years old, once the property of Peter Marius Green, on the shelves of which are several pewter dishes used by old time Dutch people.

Mrs. Bettie Taylor Dandridge, of Winchester, Va., is the daughter of President Zachary Taylor, and during his presidency was the lady of the white house. She was then the wife of Col. Bliss, United States navy, after whose death she married Philip Dandridge, whom she survives. Mrs. Dandridge and Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnson, widow of Henry Johnson, of Baltimore, are the only survivors of the long line of distinguished women who presided over the white house previous to Gen. Grant's term.

Howling Bear, an Indian prophet of evil, predicts that within two years the people of the whole country will be suffering for food and there will be a general famine over the country, when all the people will be without corn or wheat and the animals will die for want of grass. He says that he has been told by the Great Spirit to prepare for the time when his people will be hungry, and he is now advising them to lay up stores of corn in order to be ready when the famine comes. He should have been named Howling-Idiot.

According to the latest census bulletin, New York has 44,067 and New Jersey 3,295 superfluous females—total for the two states, 47,362. On the other hand, Pennsylvania has a male majority of 74,648. Putting the three states together there are 27,286 persons who must perforce violate the doctrine that "it is not good for man to be alone," unless drafts are made upon New England. The entire population of the three states is 12,700,770, of which 2,746,745 or nearly 22 per cent. are foreign born. New York's foreign population is 26 per cent. of the whole, Pennsylvania's 16 and New Jersey's 23.

A Toronto newspaper says that the French Canadians are emigrating to the United States in greater numbers than ever before. It is a stampede, judging by the description given. It is called "a flight of the population," and is creating a feeling of serious apprehension. At one little railway station in the province of Quebec 250 tickets were sold in a day to emigrants for the United States. In the parishes well along down the St. Lawrence, below the city of Quebec, the exodus is very great. At a railway junction called Levis the average is 1,500 persons a week taking trains for "the states."

Sheep are not regarded as useful as beasts of burden, but in a large part of northwest India thousands of sheep carry for many miles the commodities that are purchased by the sale of their own wool. The mountain paths among the foothills of the Himalayas are so precipitous that the sheep, more surefooted than larger beasts, are preferred as burden carriers. The load for each sheep is from sixteen to twenty pounds. The sheep are driven from village to village, with the wool still growing, and in each town the farmer shears the wool he sells there, and loads the sheep with the grain he receives in exchange.

THREE FAMILIES LOST.

They Comprised a Total of Twelve Persons, and Were Drowned in the Floods Near Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn., May 24.—Pemiscot county has been almost depopulated. Three-fourths of the county is now under water and assistance is urgently needed at several points in the county between Reelfoot Lake and Paragould on the Arkansas side. There were three families drowned there last Friday. Their names are: Wash. Hall, wife and three children; Joseph Mallory, wife and two children; Samuel Moore (colored), wife and daughter. Hall's wife was caught on a tree and was rescued by a hunter. She lived only an hour.

The Arkansas bottoms are all under water and the number of lives lost and property destroyed cannot be estimated, because no boats have gone into the flooded districts and nothing definite has been learned from there.

The flood situation between Cairo and Memphis is more serious than between Cairo and St. Louis, because there is a greater acreage covered by water and more farms ruined. Every steamer passing Island No. 10 and Island No. 37 is hailed and takes on families that have been rendered homeless. It is estimated that 300 horses and mules and 2,000 head of cattle have been drowned and that 700,000 acres of cultivated farms are under water, which of course means that the crops along the Mississippi valley are totally destroyed. According to Capt. Howard, of the Anchor line, there are 225,000 acres of wheat destroyed, 300,000 acres of corn ruined and nearly 200,000 acres of cotton inundated. In many places an inch more of water would mean total destruction to hundreds of farms that are now safe, but the waters continue to rise, and in two days more it is expected that 1,000,000 acres of cultivated ground will be flooded.

Pine Bluff, Ark., May 24.—The destitution among the flood sufferers, white as well as black, between Little Rock and the mouth is appalling. This city and its vicinity are filled with thousands of refugees. The cotton crop all along the river is totally destroyed and it is hard to tell on what the farmers will live this summer. The government boat, C. B. Reese, arrived here Monday evening from the upper river, where she supplied 1,500 half-famished people on seventeen different landings with provisions furnished by the citizens of Little Rock. Hundreds of people were taken along and put off on dry places. At Eagle's Landing 120 people were found living in three houses. Two men were seen drowning by the crew and four were rescued from house tops, where they for hours found refuge.

Washington, May 24.—The president has received the following telegram:

"Shreveport, La., May 22.—The President of the United States, Washington: There is great destitution and suffering among the multitude of colored people who have been driven from their homes and deprived of employment by the floods in the Red river. Great numbers are now in this city and more will come. We earnestly appeal to you, and through you to the nation, for relief and assistance.

"Wm. Harpel, Chairman of Committee."

A VANDERBILT DEAD.

Typhus Fever Causes the Death of the Son of Cornelius Vanderbilt at New York.

New York, May 24.—William H. Vanderbilt, aged 21, son of Cornelius Vanderbilt, died Monday night at 10:15 o'clock. His father, mother, brother and sister were present when he passed away. He had been weak all the earlier part of Sunday and was gradually recovering from the effects of three hemorrhages on Sunday until at 8:35 Monday night he had another hemorrhage of the stomach. Dr. McLanes was with him when he died. He apparently rallied from the attack under the doctor's treatment and then went to sleep. His sleep was perpetual, for he never awoke.

The deceased inherited by the will of his grandfather, William H. Vanderbilt, $1,000,000, the income to be converted to his use when he attained his majority, the principal to be placed to his credit when he became 30 years of age. He was the only grandson of William H. Vanderbilt mentioned in his will. The deceased was one of the most popular men of the junior class of Yale college.

THREE MEN SLAIN.

Murders Committed in One Evening in an Atlanta Suburb.

Atlanta, Ga., May 24.—The waterworks here was the scene Sunday night of three tragedies, two of which have resulted fatally, and the victim of the third will die. Owing to the stringent liquor laws the people around the waterworks lay in supplies by the quantity Saturday. A large number of men got up an impromptu dance on the hill near by. They were half drunk and hilarious. Kid Sandford stepped upon the toes of Mack Matthews. The latter drew his revolver and shot Sandford dead. This scattered the dancers, angering them at the same time. In one of the groups which was discussing the tragedy later Bob Taylor and John Johnson disagreed. They fired simultaneously. One ball went through Taylor's breast, leaving no hope of life. Within the next half hour John Kennedy and "Kicking" Bill Taylor came together. Taylor was shot in the abdomen and died from its effects. None of the guilty men had been caught.

Three Lives Lost by a Boat Capsizing.

Arkansas Pass, Tex., May 24.—By the capsizing of a boat opposite the lighthouse a boating party of three, consisting of T. G. Tinghom and wife and the 9-year-old daughter of Charles Pinckley, all residents of this place, were drowned. Their bodies were swept out to sea by a strong ebbing tide.

Two Hundred People Sacrificed.

London, May 24.—A dispatch from Lagos says that the Jebus made a sacrifice of 200 people, including many maidens, in order to propitiate the gods prior to battling with the British.

GOULDN'T HOLD HIM.

O'Brien, the Escaped Bunco Man, Too Slippery for the Havre Police—He Is Captured in the French City, But Again Succeeds in Escaping.

London, May 24.—The arrest of O'Brien, the New York bunko steerer, has been confirmed. He was captured at Havre while leaving the steamer Marseilles, which left New Orleans on May 1 for Havre and Antwerp. The fugitive tried to leave the steamer with the cargo when he was detected and captured. O'Brien will be given an opportunity, it is stated, to fight against extradition, and as soon as he was arrested he inquired about getting counsel. The proceedings for his extradition will have to be under the present French treaty, which is quite restricted in its terms as compared with the treaty negotiated by Mr. Whitelaw Reid, and which has not, it is stated, been approved in America.

London, May 24.—A later dispatch from Havre says that O'Brien, the notorious American criminal who was captured in that city by the French police, has succeeded in making his escape and is again at large. The police are conducting an active search for him and the vessels in the harbor are closely watched. Notice has also been telegraphed to all the adjoining towns. It is believed that O'Brien will make his way to Belgium, and that his original intention was to proceed to that country.

FAVA TO THE PRESIDENT.

Greetings Exchanged Over the Resumption of Diplomatic Relations.

Washington, May 24.—Baron Fava, the Italian minister, made a formal call on President Harrison Monday morning in company with Secretary Blaine. There were no particular formalities and no set speeches. Baron Fava took occasion, however, to inform the president that his sovereign, the Italian government, and the Italian people alike were greatly pleased and satisfied by the settlement of the recent difficulty in a manner so honorable to both Italy and the United States. In referring to his former service in Washington he remarked that he had earnestly endeavored during a residence of eleven years to strengthen the ties of friendship happily existing between the two countries, and he hardly need add that, with the aid of the president and of his government, he would continue his best efforts in that direction, not forgetting above all the sympathy which the United States has historically had for Italian unity. The president replied in substance that he was personally and officially gratified at the return of Baron Fava, whose services in promoting good relations between Italy and the United States had been highly appreciated. The president added with earnestness that he was specially gratified that the differences between the two countries had been settled with honor to both.

BIG BLAZE AT SPOKANE.

Large Mills Destroyed and Other Property Valued at $230,000.

Spokane, Wash., May 24.—Fire broke out Monday at 4:30 in the factory of the Spokane Mills Company on the river front. The flames spread with wonderful rapidity and in a few minutes the entire structure was ablaze. Employes had to run for their lives and three of them were injured in leaping from the building. At 9 o'clock two of the employes are missing and it is feared they perished in the flames. They were Adolph Schultz and a man named Butcher. The injured men are Andrew Johnson, who suffered a frightful fracture of the leg; William Grenwold, whose leg was badly sprained, and James Smith, badly burned on the hands.

In spite of efforts of the fire department the flames quickly spread to the Echo roller mills, owned by Bravender & Keats, which were entirely consumed. The fire then jumped the river and destroyed the oatmeal mill owned by Olney & Wadhams, and the building of the Washington Shingle Company. It also burned four cottages, damaged the Howard street bridge and National iron works and a steam laundry. The loss as near as it can be figured is about $230,000.

USED BULLET AND KNIFE.

Paris Treated to a Sensation Similar to the Noted Deacon Case—A Woman Shot and Stabbed for Captivating Another Woman's Husband.

Paris, May 24.—The Figaro relates a story of a murder which, in view of the Deacon case, is exciting great public interest. The story is to the effect that the wife of a government official had long suspected her husband of unfaithful conduct with the wife of a deputy. Discovering the guilty couple together Sunday night she drew a revolver and fired five bullets into the body of the woman who had captivated her husband's affections. This not killing her she drew a dagger and stabbed her repeatedly, the woman dying in a few minutes. The police were called in and the murderess taken to prison.

The name of the murderess is Mme. Reymond, and the name of her victim Laffimonne Delaporte. The murdered woman was a niece of Jean Casimir-Perier. Mme. Reymond, who is a pretty brunette and only 24 years old, says that Mme. Delaporte was an intimate friend of hers who had separated from her husband. She herself introduced Mme. Delaporte to M. Reymond, and soon afterward discovered that they were meeting secretly.

Must Replant.

Mascoutah, Ill., May 24.—Hundreds of acres of corn planted in this section of the state prior to the recent heavy rains must be replanted. The seed has rotted in the ground. Farmers are generally discouraged owing to the lateness of the season and fear that they will be unable to put in a crop. Old-time farmers, however, recall the fact that there was a similar spring flood in 1858. The farmers planted their corn that year the first week of June and turned out the best corn ever raised in southern Illinois.

Funeral of a Brave Engineer.

Sioux City, Ia., May 24.—An immense crowd attended the funeral Sunday of Andrew G. Anderson, the Swedish engineer who rescued twenty-seven persons from the flood. He was drowned while trying to save a woman who was in extreme peril. The Knights of Pythias and citizens will by subscription set up a fitting monument in his honor.

Seven Were Drowned.

Befne, May 24.—By the capsizing of a barque on Lake Zurich seven pensioners of the Wurmstach convent were drowned. The other eight occupants of the boat were saved.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Awarded One Cent Damages.

Edward R. Harroun, ex-assessor of St. Paul, has won his case against the gambling syndicate of Tanner, Flannigan & Co., of Minneapolis, but his verdict was really a defeat. While assessor, Harroun made about $9,000 a year, but he gambled away all of this and what he could borrow from his friends. It was learned that Harroun had lost over $30,000 at poker and in a vain attempt to beat the horse races. He charged Tanner, Flannigan & Co. with having won $15,000 of this amount. The jury awarded Harroun damages of one cent.

Incendiaries Sentenced.

In the district court at Winona Judge Stait sentenced Louis Goldberg, a dry goods merchant, to ten years, and his son Max to seven years in state's prison for arson. The Goldbergs are Russian Jews and have been in this country but a short time. On the night of February 15 they set fire to their store, but it was discovered in time to save two families from death, one family living above and one adjoining the store.

Murder and Suicide.

B. A. Schrofield, of Ewing, Mich., shot and instantly killed his wife at Duluth and then shot himself in the breast, inflicting a fatal wound. They had been married seven years. Several months ago Mrs. Schrofield went to Duluth, intending to desert her husband because of drinking. He followed her and when she again refused to live with him a quarrel resulted in the double tragedy.

Guilty of Forgery.

Sam Bergquist, a well known farmer of Parker Prairie, plead guilty to forgery at Fergus Falls. Bergquist, it seems, has been in the business for a long time. His method was to forge his neighbors' names to a note payable to himself and then deposit it as collateral at the bank. Ordinarily he would pay his note when due and get the forged notes back, thus escaping detection.

Worried to Death.

John J. Penner, secretary of the Twin City Packing Company, died in St. Paul of acute delirium. He had been ill but a few days, and death was supposed to have been caused by the worriment incidental to the failure of the Commercial bank in which he had deposited funds which he held in trust for his sister-in-law.

—Mr. Samuel Butler is lecturing in England on the question: "Was Homer a Woman?" He believes the Illad was written by a man, but he regards the Odyssey as the product of a woman. The reasons he alleges for his belief are not complimentary to the fair sex. He says the poems show almost incredible ignorance of the detail of common everyday matters. The author evidently knew nothing about ships, and displayed ignorance in other ways. He ventures to say that if the Odyssey were to appear anonymously for the first time now there is not a critic who would not say it was the product of a woman.

THE mounds are sinking level with the plain
As if time's hurried footsteps gently pressed
With tender memories where our heroes rest—
Those mounds above our country's buried slain.

The turf is thickening with the passing years,
And daisies now grow thicker in the sod,
Where sleep the nation's dead, and thicker nod
The lilies watered by a nation's tears.

And all is calm beneath the grass to-day,
Quiet and soft their peaceful slumbers prove,
Heedless alike of what goes on above
Whether they lay them down in blue or gray.

We bring our offerings for those who stood
For home and country against all beside,
Who, holding loyal to that service, died,
Thus sealing their devotion with their blood.

And may the passing years weave closer yet
The interlacing ties of human kind,
As in the sod the knotted grasses bind
And hold the springing daisies closer set.
—Isaac Bassett Choate in Good Housekeeping.

IT was in the delicious bloom-time of May. Mead and lawn were an expanse of richest emerald, from the verdure depths of which gleamed vari-hued blossoms whose blended odors were borne in through open window and doorway.

The golden sunset glow had gradually faded from the west, and the soft gray of the twilight crept adown the gentler slopes of the far-off hills and across the level plain, till all the earth seemed enfolded in its shadow.

Anna Brown had been watching the scene from her seat in the deep window recess, but as the twilight stillness began to grow oppressive, she stepped out through the window, and, descending the broad stone steps of the veranda, she passed down the graveled path, stopping beside a sweet syringa, whose wealth of snowy bloom poured incense all about her. Favorite flower of hers, and favorite also of—another.

Humming a snatch of half sweet, half sad melody, she scanned the flowering shrub in the deepening gloom, and, spying a cluster of blossoms barely within her reach, she put up her hand and stood tiptoe to grasp the coveted prize. But a soft step behind startled her and another hand with a farther reach was extended above hers, and, grasping, broke from the bough the cluster of flowers, while a voice which both her ear and her heart recognized said: "I wish I might always gain for you such of life's longed-for treasures as lie beyond your every reach."

Then while he begged her to let him fasten them in the coils of her raven hair she marked the little quaver in his voice and that the hands grew unsteady while they worked. But you will not wonder at that nor at what follows when I tell you this was way back in those dreadful "sixties," those years that tried the souls of men and the hearts of women; when hearts that one moment ran high with joy were the next low plunged in the depths of despair; when, indeed, "eyes looked love to eyes that spake again," but spoke only to tell of coming separation—for years, perhaps—and, "oh, sad perhaps," for to how many it meant for—ever! Oh, the horrors of war!

In those days mothers kissed, in parting, the scarce bearded lips of sons, who, it seemed to them, had but just left the cradles over which they had sung their "Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber." Fathers hung on the necks of stalwart youths who had but just begun to be the stay of their infirmity of years. Wives with blanched lips quivering bade adieu to the husband and father, gazing agonizingly by turns at the going helper and the staying helpless, the dependent ones, whose infant lips called him "father" and hung on him for support.

Ah, you who had no part in the scenes, too young to realize the anguish all about you, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and then join in the prayer with us that never again may the black and blood-dripping wings of war cast a shadow on our fair land. To you, perhaps, there was only the grandeur of the "army with banners," the inspiring melody of "fife and drum," the gracefulness of the uniformed body of soldiers, as hundreds of feet kept time to the martial strains. Ah! if only that were all there is of war.

But to our theme. The unsteady hands, when they had fastened the snowy blossoms in place, caught in their grasp the steadier hands of Anna Brown, and while she was somewhat startled at the suddenness of the whole affair, George Earle broke out with:

"Anna, I must tell you all I have to say to you quickly, and you will pardon my impetuosity when you understand all. You must have seen all along how much I love you. I had not thought to speak of it till I had accomplished certain undertakings, but events have crowded me to a declaration. Tell me that you love me in return, and promise me that when—when I can claim you, you will be my wife."

"I do love you, George, and I will be your wife whenever you want me. But something has happened, George, or something is going to happen, or—well, I do not understand your actions. You are usually more calm and self-possessed. Do tell me"—

"My own darling, I have enlisted, and in a very short time will be on my way to join the forces already in the field. There, do not be so startled, Anna. I should have been less abrupt, but it is all so sudden, to myself even, that I can scarcely realize it."

"But you will not go?" she pleaded, while a shudder shook her frame.

It was well he could not see the look of agony on her face, he might else have faltered. Oh the kindliness of the dusk, for even if he would, it was too late to turn back, having "once put his hand to the plow."

"You could not love a coward, nor be the wife of one," and he tried to speak bravely. "But, Anna, sit here on this arbor-seat, only a little while, for my minutes are numbered, and I will tell you all. It is my duty to go to my country's aid, yet I had not intended to go till the impulse seized me to-day. Amid the stirring scenes of the rally, under the magic spell cast over me by the thrilling strains of martial music, and with all the while the echo in my heart: 'Your country needs you,' I was impelled onward with the tide, and enrolled myself among those who go to the scene of conflict. Under less agitating influences, I might have failed of courage to take this step, yet knowing I have done right, I do not regret it. Bravery, after all, is but finding out one's duty and doing it."

And thus they talked on during the time he dared linger, and all their plans were for their marriage when the soldier should "Come marching home again." When the time of parting came, the moon had just crept up from the horizon, and they might have taken its flood of light, as it came to them after the darkness, as an omen of good, but it only served to reveal to each the white face of the other; showed to each that the eyes of the other were dim with their fullness of but half-suppressed tears. Knowledge which only gave added pangs to the parting.

The good-bys came all too soon, for: "Early in the morning, before you are awake, I shall be on my way," George had said. Before she should "awake!" When will men learn that a woman, with either a new great joy or a new deep sorrow, does not sleep? And when both lie in her heart, having come to her at one birth, then indeed hath sleep departed from her eyes.

In such partings it may indeed be hard for the one who goes, but I think the bitterest of the potion is mingled in the cup of the one who stays; and yet it remained for the after years to show to her that the pangs of parting are not the keenest pangs the heart may know.

Anna Brown had been left an orphan in extreme youth. Her home had since been with a distant relative, who, having no family of her own, had taken and cared for Anna for the sake of the sum derived from the latter's sufficient income in payment for board and necessary care. Love did not enter into the consideration on the part of either party, so that while Anna had always had a pleasant home, she had had "No one to love, none to caress," beyond the usual friendships of girlhood. Her association with George Earle had made a new epoch in her life, and gave to all her plans and purposes a higher zest. "Something to live for" must come into each life in some form, ere will be developed the latent "best there is in us."

Letters from the "front" came often, to cheer otherwise lonely hours. Work for the soldiers was entered into with greater enthusiasm since of "the soldiers" her lover was one. And then, as months rolled by, the time dragged less heavily, since some hope could be indulged that soon the cruel war would be over, and she began to plan for its end, and his home-coming, and the wedding. Suddenly the letters ceased to come. Again and again she wrote, but no reply came back, and now wearily, sadly, she awaited the end of the conflict. She scanned carefully the papers that came into her possession, yet with a dread each day that she might chance to find tidings that disaster had befallen him. At last the headline of an item caught her eye. It read:

"Marriage of Capt. George Earle and Florence Fair, daughter of a southern planter." She read no farther. She had known of his anticipated promotion, so that "Capt. George Earle" was her lover. It could be no other. Folding the paper, she laid it on the smouldering coals in the grate, took from the drawer of her desk a neat packet of letters—his letters—and added them to the flame. She also unlocked a casket and was about to added its contents to the sacrificial fires, but her courage failed her, and the shriveled sweet-syringa blooms were the one thing she spared herself as a relic. Those fragrant blossoms he had twined in her hair so long ago! Not yet two years, but to her it seemed very long ago.

When the fire had died out, all the softness had gone out of her heart; her eyes had lost their wonted radiance and a curve of scorn seemed to have molded her lips anew. The house that had been her home was closed, its owner having died, and Anna had boarded since with strangers. Now she bade adieu to friends, and went—no one knew whither, but she went abroad.

Twenty years later and there would be many changes to note, should we stop to note them. Anna Brown is visiting an old school friend, whom she found in an unexpected retreat soon after her return from foreign shores. Out of courtesy to her friend, she is among those who have assembled to decorate the graves of the fallen soldiers, to lay above their dust the tokens of a grateful people.

But did you notice? While the speaker dwelt on the bravery and faithfulness of the sleeping, while he referred gratefully to their self-sacrificing devotion to their country and their loved ones, while he paid a glowing tribute to their loyalty, not to country only, but to parents, wives, sisters and sweethearts, till tears came to the eyes of many, her eyes were dry and held a look of skeptical hardness, and the derisive smile of scorn came again to the haughty lips. Small wonder to us who know her past, for do we not all measure all people by our estimate of those with whom we have been brought into personal relations?

Later she accompanied her friend to their family lot in the cemetery, whither she carried two beautiful wreaths, which, she explained to Anna as they went, were for the graves of her brother and a comrade of his, who slept beside him. They were devoted friends, and this one died after a long illness, and as he had no friends to care for his body, her brother had requested its burial in their lot. "And in less time than he dreamed of," said the sister, "he was lying beside him."

"There was a pathetic romance about this poor fellow's death," she continued, designating the grave of the stranger-soldier as she spoke. "He had no friends except his betrothed, and at the time of his death, she could not be heard from, though efforts were made to learn of her whereabouts when his recovery was despaired of."

By this time they stood by the headstone, and Anna read the name "George Earle," and gathered enough additional knowledge to bring her full assurance that her lover—hers till death—was the soldier-stranger who slept beside his dead comrade. That soothed her sorrow, to know that though dead, he had been true to her in life. There is a sorrow deeper than that which the parting by death brings to us. Her eyes shed the first tears they had known since she had thought him false.

Then, as her friend—more than half suspecting—drew a little apart, and joined private groups, Annie knelt beside the grass-covered mound, and taking from her corsage the cluster of sweet syringas her friend had fastened there and insisted upon her wearing, she laid them lovingly above the dead. Strange! for all these years since that night of parting, she had never worn them till now.

Just then a stranger, a man with hair and beard plentifully sprinkled with gray, came from the opposite side and not noticing her kneeling form, stopped and scanned the head-stone. "A strange mistake," he said, half-aloud. At the sound of his voice, Anna rose to her feet and would have turned away, had not the stranger spoken.

"Pardon the seeming obtrusiveness of a stranger, but I came to rectify a mistake which, though made years ago, but lately came to my knowledge. It came about as a hospital case of mistaken identity, so that the body interred here is presumed to be my own. My friend who lies there—noble fellow—thinking I could not live, arranged to have my body sent here for burial. He was taken sick himself, soon after writing home to that effect, and others, in aiming to carry out his wishes, sent the body of a comrade who died, and who was wrongly reported as being myself—George Earle. But"—he checked himself as he was about to say more—"I am too fast. You were placing flowers there. Perhaps a friend of yours lies here, and I am myself in error."

"I—I thought George Earle—was buried here," she stammered.

"And you are—oh, you are Anna Brown—or was," he said, recognizing now voice and feature for she was not greatly changed. The same hair, untouched by frost. The same eyes, to which recent tears had brought back their wonted softness.

"I am Anna Brown still. And you are George Earle, I am sure, for you have his features," and the old, cold look came back to her eyes, and the scorn to her lips, and the hardness to her heart. George Earle, dead but true to her till death, was a man far different in her estimation from George Earle, alive and false. He noted the change.

"Have you no welcome, Anna, for one who has had no aim in life, for the last twenty years, but to find you?"

"You forgot you were false to me. You were married—"

"Married! And not to you? Never."

"But I read of the marriage of Capt. George Earle and the daughter of a southern planter."

"Then I am not the only George Earle, as I also find you are not the only Anna Brown, when I try to find you in a country full of people. That you are true to your soldier lover I want no surer testimony than I find in the fact that, when you thought me dead, you were laying my favorite flower on my supposed grave. We have both been the sad victims of some of the unavoidable mistakes of the war. Let us bury the past and in the joy of the remaining years of our lives, forget its bitterness."

They were married before the syringas were done blooming, and she wore them for her bridal flowers.—Sylvia Silverthorne, in Housekeeper.

"I THOUGHT GEORGE EARLE WAS BURIED HERE."

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—When specially prepared tooth powders are not at hand, the teeth can be well cleansed by the aid of a good soap, common salt, or finely-powdered charcoal.

—Creamed Potatoes: Chop cold boiled potatoes fine, and put them into a saucepan with a little butter; add pepper and salt to taste; stir occasionally, so as not to brown them; just before taking up, add a cup of rich, sweet cream; cook a minute longer and serve.—Housekeeper.

—Tapioca Pudding: Wash a teacupful of tapioca through several waters, and add to a quart of milk and let soak two hours. Beat four eggs and half a cupful of sugar together, add a pinch of salt and the juice of half a lemon, bake in a moderate oven half an hour and serve cold.—Home.

—Oatmeal Gruel: This should be cooked in a double boiler for three hours. Use granulated oatmeal only, and allow three-quarters of a cup to a quart of boiling water. If allowed by the doctor this should be served over a tart roasted apple and sugar and cream over the whole.—N. Y. World.

—Rough-and-Ready Cakes: One cup milk, one-fourth cup sugar, one teaspoon butter, one saltspoon salt, one-fourth cup yeast, one egg. Melt the sugar, butter and salt in the hot milk. When cool, add the yeast and beaten egg, then beat in flour enough to make a stiff dough. Let it rise over night. In the morning pull off the dough in small, irregular-shaped pieces and drop into hot fat.—Boston Budget.

—To Make Aspig Jelly: Boil two onions, two small carrots, a few sprigs of parsley and a little salt in one pint of water; when done strain and stir in two dessertspoonfuls of beef extract, put back the liquor in a saucepan, and add one ounce of gelatine soaked in nearly one pint of water, boil up and let simmer for twenty minutes; strain through a jelly bag and pour into a mold to cool. Tarragon vinegar may be used for flavoring if liked.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Black Bean Soup: Soak a pint of black beans over night in cold water. When ready to cook, put into two and one-half quarts of fresh water, which should be boiling, and simmer until completely dissolved, adding more boiling water from time to time if needed. There should be about two quarts of all when done. Rub through a colander, add salt, a half cup of cream, and reheat. When hot, turn through a soup strainer, add two or more teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, and serve.—Good Health.

—Jannemange: One ounce of isinglass, half a pint of boiling water, yolks of eight eggs, juice and peel of one small lemon, sugar to taste. Steep the peel of the lemon in half a pint of boiling water, and then pour it over an ounce of isinglass; add to it the yolks of eight well-beaten eggs, the juice of the lemon and sugar to taste. Set it over a brisk fire until the isinglass is thoroughly dissolved, stirring it all the time; then strain it through a fine hair sieve and pour it into a mold to become cold.—Boston Herald.

—Potato Balls: Take half a dozen potatoes, boil them, pass them through a sieve, and work into them in a bowl one gill of cream and the yolks of three eggs; add pepper, salt and nutmeg to taste, and some parsley finely chopped. When they are well mixed and smooth, take them up by tablespoonfuls, roll each in a ball, flatten it, and flour it slightly. Lay them all in a sauce-pan, with plenty of butter melted, and cook them slowly. Turn them over when one side is done, and serve hot as soon as both sides are colored.—Springfield Republican.

—Flour and Indian Waffles: Two and one-half cups of sifted Indian meal, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one heaping tablespoonful of butter, two eggs beaten very light, two cups of rich milk. Mix salt, baking powder, flour and meal, and melt the butter. Make a hollow in the flour and pour in butter, eggs and milk, stirring as you pour, that all may be a smooth batter. Heat the waffle irons. Oil them well with fresh lard, and fill three-quarters full. Bake over a clear fire. Turn the waffle irons often, that the waffles may not burn.—Boston Budget.

New Silks.

"Trout foulards" are the novelty in summer silks. These are changeable surahs in wide vague stripes irregularly speckled with black. Those of gray changing to pink and finely dotted with black really make one think of the speckled beauties of the brook as they dart through the water, while others less realistic are of blue shot with yellow, green with blue, or blue with golden brown. There are also speckled plaid silks of stiffer gros grain in small squares dotted with black that are used for soft silk corselets that extend upward spreading on the bodice like the calyx of a flower, with broad sash ends falling low at the back, and also for the new projecting butterfly bow that Raudnitz adds at the throat of many pretty wool gowns. Other new silks for skirts of dresses are of still heavier make, and have fine raised cords of a color different from the ground crossing between lengthwise brocaded stripes, while still other silks have lengthwise cords of a different color from the ground, like those of the fashionable Russian velours.—Harper's Bazar.

Fashionable Trimming.

Besides the black lace and velvet ribbon trimmings, spangled gold gimps, warranted not to tarnish, are used to decorate many of the summer foulard silks and flowered satins. This garniture is confined to the waist and sleeves only, and does not appear upon the skirt, it being a very conspicuous trimming. These gimps are frequently laid between folds of black or dark colored velvets with elegant effect. New dress galloons show beautifully-shaded arbesque leaves, palms and scrolls, tiny roses in ribbon work, flower bouquets in solid colors, also Persian effects rich in cut jet and mixtures of reseda with rose pink and damask red, sage green with copper pink, etc. Large and small buttons, stamped and enameled, are made to match these galloons. These have raised borders in relief, with flowers and other designs in the center, and with additions of gold, silver, bronze and celluloid in many forms.—N. Y. Post.

—One of Tennyson's admirers recently sent him some verses containing an allusion to the poet's "wintry hair." In acknowledging the compliment his lordship said: "If by 'wintry hair' you allude to a tree whose leaves are half gone, you are right; but if you mean 'white,' you are wrong, for I never had a gray hair on my head."

The June Wide Awake

Is a picturesque and altogether delightful number. Elbridge S. Brooks "reproduces" for the boys and girls of today a Roman boy's letter descriptive of the gorgeous pageant in the Rome of Emperor Augustus' day when Horace led the children's parade to the strains of his famous secular hymn, and when emperor, senators, matrons, priests and Vestals joined the young paraders in doing honor to "Children's Day;" that now famous Franco-American boy-editor, Tello d'Apery, tells how he "runs" his paper, the Sunny Hour, and swells his "barefoot fund;" Edith Robinson has a timely and typical Boston story of "How Jack Sailed with Leif Ericsson." Two fine new serial stories are begun in this number: "The Coral Ship," a story of adventure by Kirk Munroe, and "That Mary Ann," a delightful girl and boy story by Kate Upson Clark. The poetry of this number is from Louise Chandler Moulton, "M. E. B.," Margaret J. Preston, Cora Stuart Wheeler, Lilian Crawford True, and others, and the "Men and Things" department is as full of good material as usual. The illustrations are full of strength and spirit, and the number is one that will be read, without stopping, from cover to cover. Wide Awake is only 20 cents a No.; $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Co., Boston, publishers.

A New Map.

When Napoleon the First was in the full tide of success, over-running Europe at his will, William Pitt said to his secretary, "Take that map down from the wall, and roll it up; we shall not need it for fifty years." In this country, our situation is much the same; we have to put away our old map as of no use, but unlike Pitt, we never expect to need it again. His maker of new maps was Napoleon; ours the railroad. The geographies used in school forty years ago are curiosities for a museum but did you ever think that but for the railroads, we might use those same geographies with very little changes? The country west of the Mississippi would still be the "Mandan Territory" and the "Great American Desert." The railroads have filled the west with cities and towns, and the Burlington reaches more of the principal ones than any other line. For tickets, maps and information, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The Only One Ever Printed—Can You Find the Word?

There is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you book, beautiful lithographs or samples free.

THE fisheries question—Did you bring the flask?—Kate Field's Washington.

On the road to health—the consumptive who reasons and thinks. Consumption is developed through the blood. It's a scrofulous affection of the lungs—a blood-taint. Find a perfect remedy for scrofula, in all its forms—something that purifies the blood, as well as claims to. That, if it's taken in time, will cure Consumption.

Dr. Pierce has found it. It's his "Golden Medical Discovery." As a strength-restorer, blood-cleanser, and flesh-builder, nothing like it is known to medical science. For every form of Scrofula, Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, Weak Lungs, Severe Coughs, and kindred ailments, it's the only remedy so sure that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

"You get well, or you get $500." That's what is promised, in good faith, by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, to sufferers from Catarrh. The worst cases, no matter of how long standing, are permanently cured by this Remedy.

"German Syrup"

My acquaintance with Boschee's German Syrup was made about fourteen years ago. I contracted a cold which resulted in a hoarseness and cough which disabled me from filling my pulpit for a number of Sabbaths. After trying a physician, without obtaining relief I saw the advertisement of your remedy and obtained a bottle. I received quick and permanent help. I never hesitate to tell my experience. Rev. W. H. Haggerty, Martinsville, N. J.

Pity the Sorrows of a Poor Old Man

Or woman bowed with the infirmities of age, and more particularly lumbago. But more practical, more friendly than pity is this sound piece of advice to such persons, as well to all delicate people and convalescents: Try a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest sustaining tonic which people of declining years and the feeble generally can adopt. Kidney and rheumatic troubles and lumbago, which are peculiarly incident to age, are counteracted by this superb corrective, which also removes indigestion, malarial complaints, biliousness, la grippe.

To Cleanse the System

Effectually yet gently, when costive or bilious or when the blood is impure or sluggish, to permanently cure habitual constipation, to awaken the kidneys and liver to a healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, to dispel headaches, colds or fevers, use Syrup of Figs.

S.S.S.
CURES SCROFULA

Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass., says her mother has been cured of Scrofula by the use of four bottles of S.S.S. after having had much other treatment, and being reduced to quite a low condition of health, as it was thought she could not live.

S.S.S. Cured my little boy of hereditary scrofula. INHERITED SCROFULA which appeared all over his face. For a year I had given up all hope of his recovery, when finally I was induced to use S.S.S. A few bottles cured him, and no symptoms of the disease remain.

They are thought by some to be food; but this is not proved. They are tonics; this is admitted by all.

Cod-liver oil is mainly a food, but also a tonic.

In Scott's Emulsion the cod-liver oil and hypophosphites are so combined as to get the full advantage of both.

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Yes we do. We pay cash for eggs. C. H. Green & Co. 33-3t.

—Mr. Tanner has retired for a season from the Waverly Tribune.

—There will be no services in the Presbyterian Church on Sabbath next.

—A car load of Watertown flour passed through here on its way to the cities via the G. N. last week.

—Delano is becoming a cash market for almost all kinds of produce. That's as it should be. Let the good work go on.

—The new awning in front of the Delano Produce Company's place of business is ornamental as well as useful.

—Farmers have nearly finished corn planting notwithstanding the continual cold weather. Small grain is looking fine.

—The Great Northern has had some dirt dumped at the approaches to the R. R. bridge here as old Crow threatened to remove some of the piling.

—C. M. Conzet went to Hanover Thursday to assist P. H. Darrow & Son start a harness shop at that place which will be conducted by Ed Darrow hereafter.

—River Street on Wednesday presented quite a cityfied appearance. Teams were hitched along the railing on the west side in large numbers while people crowded the sidewalk.

—Rev. J. R. Davies will deliver a memorial sermon at the M. E. church on Sunday evening the day before Decoration day. All are invited especially old soldiers and their friends.

—The Delano Dramatic Club have postponed the entertainment "The Tramp's Daughter", advertised for June 1, until Thursday, June 9th, on account of the death of Mrs. Probst.

—The city council should each be furnished with a spirited team and asked to drive through under the R. R. bridge on the west side and see what they think about having some of the obstructions to the highway removed.

—G. A. Wright, of Montrose, came down on Saturday after the coat advertised as "Found" in the GAZETTE of last Friday. It pays to put things in the paper where everybody sees them.

—The Crow as it flows through our village now is a fine stream and all would be glad to see it remain at its present stage throughout the year. We have not been down stream to see if the dam has been built to cause this rise but are of opinion that it is entirely due to other causes more in accord with dame nature.

—Complaints are frequent concerning the dumping grounds chosen by the council. They should keep dirt over the manure if they are bound to use it for filling streets and giving flavor to village wells, so that it will not be compelling neighbors to keep closed doors as they are certainly entitled to pure air and should have pure water.

—An election will be held at the City Hall on Saturday, May 28 from 3 to 5 P. M. to vote on issuing bonds in the sum of $10,000. in denominations of $1,000 each payable in from 5 to 15 years, to pay outstanding school bonds. A financier from the rural districts suggests that a better way would be to make the bonds of $1,000 each, payable one each year so that when five years roll around we will have paid $5,000.00 and not be obliged to "re-fund" the debt again. The rural gentleman's suggestion strikes us as being a good one. This debt should be reduced and that is what the sinking fund was supposed to be for.

—Saturday evening's school board meeting was attended by several citizens. The chairman claimed a right to make a tie and succeeded in blocking the wheels of innovations in favor of a good school. One very weak reason he gave for not wishing to hire an assistant principal was that if we did we might get a cranky principal who would not get along pleasantly with the teachers. Gutzwiller wanted to take a vote of the bystanders whom it turned out had some of them been invited to be present by himself and Brazie who wished the house was full. Maxfield thought the school board should be able to transact its own business, which idea prevailed and the bystanders were not asked to vote. After considerable squabbling a vote was had for principal Dean 3, Boyce 3, no one elected; 1st room Miss Mabel Parsons was elected; 2nd room, Miss Anna Quinn was elected; for primary teacher several votes were taken but no choice made and the meeting adjourned.

—Attend the school bond election.

—Muckenheirn, Schaust & Co. held a dance at the City Hall on Tuesday evening.

—S. H. Eakin, formerly telegraph operator here and who was a delegate from his present home, in Penn., to the O. R. T. meeting held at Chatanaoga, Tenn. on his return switched off and came to Delano for a week's visit with old acquaintances. He is looking well and says he is still a bachelor.

—A few months ago a meeting of citizens was held at the City Hall to consider the procuring of some system of waterworks for fire protection. I. Gutzwiller, Jr. was made chairman of a committee appointed to report in the future. No report has yet been made and the committee has not even been called together. Mr. G. had better get his committee together and see what can be done and report, or resign his position instead of abusing the council and citizens through his organ the Eagle.

—On Wednesday afternoon the clear tones of the fire alarm sounded forth in rapid succession. The fire companies and citizens soon gathered at the town pump and a stream of water was sent up into the attic of Wiese's saloon and residence on R. R. Ave. The fire caught from sparks from Young's laundry in the rear of the hotel. But for the prompt and energetic action of all with proper facilities and sufficient water near by the entire block must have succumbed to the fiery fiend. Mr. Wiese's property was insured and he will be promply paid for his loss and is already making repairs.

—In discussing the hiring of teachers on the sidewalk near the front of Wiese's saloon, I. Gutzwiller, Jr. and Baron Von Kruger waxed rather eloquent the other day and drew considerable of an audience. The Baron was dealing the school board some solid facts when Mr. Gutzwiller sought to throw the blame for not having harmony on the board all on to the Democratic shoulders. This fired the Baron and he quickly informed the gentleman that the board was made of Republicans all but one. In naming them over and claiming them as Republicans "the man on the school board" alias I. Gutzwiller, Jr. made the unkindest cut of all, when he said John Cunningham, he is only a Republican in name. Everybody knows John as a stalwart of the General Sherman kind, long before the "man on the board" even got fired out of the Democratic camp.

—The entire community were pained to learn on Wednesday morning of the death of Mrs. Carrie Probst, wife of our esteemed citizen Louis P. Probst. Although not entirely unexpected yet so sudden was her removal from our midst as to cause an unusual regret. Mrs. Probst was a daughter of Hiram Dyer and was in the midst of a useful life, being 29 years of age, having a home over which to preside, and being beloved by all who knew her. She was a warm friend, a kind mother and a loving wife. She leaves a sorrowing husband and two sons the youngest but two weeks of age, an aged father and mother and a brother and sister to mourn her sudden demise and who have the warmest sympathies of the village in which they live in this their hour of trial and affliction. All the care that could be given was bestowed upon her during her illness with Puerpural fever which caused her death in so short a time. She was a member of the Catholic church and received its rights. Her funeral took place today from the church of her choice.

Vindictive Females.

Margaret M. Cochrane, principal of the Webster school, Minneapolis, recently published in an evening paper over her own signature, a letter seriously reflecting on my moral character, and assigned as her reason for so doing that she wished to "maintain the dignity" of her "building".

I had not intended to pay the least attention to her silly letter; but, jugding from the numerous letters and newspaper clippings concerning it received by me since its appearance, one of her insinuations about my calling during the noon intermission has been pretty generally interpreted to mean that I sought an illegitimate association with a lady teacher there, "when there were few teachers and no pupils in the building," with whom she associates my name in a way calculated to lower me in the esteem of my fellow men and to injure my reputation as a teacher.

Now I wish to state to my friends in Wright county, to whom I learn Mrs. Cochrane has sent many marked copies of her nefarious letter, that the lady teacher refered to by Mrs. Cochrane is, and has been for many years, the bosom friend of a sinful woman in St. Paul, who bears a very bad name. I will name her if I am called upon to answer any more letters from that wicked and designing principal of the Webster school. I will not deny that I was once on terms of intimate friendship with that lady teacher; but of late years, for reasons which I am very sure the public have no right or wish to know, she has held a grudge against me; and finding Mrs. Cochrane in a fit of jealousy the other day over an article written by me in the Minneapolis Evening Tribune of the 12th ult., in which I had neglected to give her (Mrs. Cochrane) favorable notice among other Minneapolis teachers of whom I saw fit to write a word of well merited praise, suggested some sort of attack on my personal character, and together they concocted the letter refered to above, which has given them and me so much ill fame.

There is nothing in this affair at all except that there are two very vindictive females in the Webster school who hold a grudge against me and are trying every way to injure me.

I want to deny most emphatically that I have had any unlawful or immoral relations with either of these women, in or around or near the Webster school at any time. And if they dare to bring my name before the public again in connection with their own they will be sorry for it.

I went to the Webster school in the first place to observe the work of a Miss Mehetable A. Smith, whose fame as a successful teacher had attracted my attention. I would have gladly remained in her department until the moment of my departure from the building; but Mrs. Cochrane, of her own accord, and without any previous intimation or request from me whatever, came and took me into the room of her friend, and left me there. Now she says I used the principal as an instrument to get at that woman, and pretends in her letter that she is in a white heat of indignation at my deception. She was not deceived at all. I was recognized and they planned the thing just as it happened. They are not so innocent in this matter as they pretend.

All I ask of them now is to leave me severely alone, and I will not harm them in any way.

I will suffer much before I will betray a confidence, and they have nothing to fear from me if they will just drop this publication business. I am sure they would if they could realize how rapidly their published letters are gaining for them the reputation of well known character assassins. They would do well to remember the old proverb that "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

On the occasion of my first visit to the Webster school I gave an assumed name to avoid recognition by that woman, who had not seen me for seven years, and not to gain an improper association with her.

In a sneering way, Mrs. Cochrane alludes to something I happened to say in my Tribune article in commendation of a good girl who had taken much pains to show me samples of work done in the Adams building and to escort me through the different departments of that most excellent school, and complains that I must have taken her (Mrs. Cochrane) for an idiot. Well, I did not exactly take her for an idiot; but to tell the truth I must say she did not impress me as one whose good sense would go far toward maintaining the "dignity" of her "building"; and those who have read her letter and the multiplicity of comments thereon I dare say will not think I very much underestimated her intellect or her character, as it appears to be pretty generally agreed that if I were indeed as bad as she represents me, or even worse, it would still be a very undignified thing for the principal of a school to rush into print with a letter, the very nature and character of which would naturally lead to all sorts of interpretations and rumors and suspicions such as have in this case precipitated the whole Webster school, with me, into a scandal from which we may now extricate ourselves the best way we know how.

I do not pretend to be a saint; but I do boldly maintain that I am not less worthy of respect than Mrs. Cochrane and her collaborator, who have sought to disgrace me by bringing my name before the public in connection with their own, because they had failed to accomplish their diabolical purpose in any other way; and in the future, if it be necessary, "for the benefit of the city principals" or the public good, to publish my imperfections to the world, I hope it may be done by someone worthy to cast the first stone and capable of telling the truth.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

Tariff is a Tax.
Grover Cleveland says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
Thomas Wilson says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

THE Prohibition ticket nominated is for Governor, Wm. J. Dean; Lt. Gov., Ole Kron; Auditor, P. B. Ramer; Treasurer, B. N. Evans; Sec. State, H. H. Aaker; Atty. Gen., Robt. Taylor. Elector 6th Dist., David Murdock, Wright county.

S. M. OWENS says he is not for fusion. Well, that makes it a heap more mixed—Donnelly and Fish with their menagerie, the prohibitionists with their hoodoo, the Alliance with its Owen and the two old parties. It will make a ticket as long as the Northern Pacific railroad.—Litchfield News Ledger.

Sugar Bounty Payments.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The payment of sugar bounty under the McKinley act on account of the production for the present fiscal year have been practically completed. The bounty amounted to about $7,500,000. The estimate for the ensuing fiscal year is $10,000,000.—New Orleans Times Democrat.

Tariff Pictures.

The free traders have been wasting a great deal of sympathy on the poor Western farmer. The poor Western farmer is getting along very well under the tariff and doesn't want their pity. Iowa may be taken as a typical farming Western state. From 1873 to 1890 the population of Iowa increased 60 per cent.

During the same period the bank deposits of the State increased 450 per cent.

And the Press might have further stated that Iowa now has a Democratic Governor, serving his second term.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1892.

Presidential politics were lugged into the House this week by the Harrison and anti-Harrison republicans. Representative Henderson, of Iowa, made a bunkum speach criticising Mr. Harrison for not having given the negroes representation on the board of managers of the world's Fair which was replied to by Representative Johnson of Indiana, who is known to be very close to Mr. Harrison. Mr. Johnson created some excitement by letting the cat out of the bag concerning the infamous Force bill, which Mr. Harson is still intent upon having enacted into a law, if his party can secure control of the House and elect the President again. Mr. Johnson indulged in the stock abuse of democrats in the South for their treatment of the poor negro, which Mr. Harrison doubtless hopes will have a good effect upon the negro delegates to Minneapolis. Democrats were delighted at this open favowal of a close and confidential friend of Mr. Harrison's that the Force bill is not dead, but only sleeping—it will be worth thousands of votes to democratic candidates for the house, as well as to the electoral ticket.

Since the arrival of commander-in-chief John C. New, early this week the Harrison army has dropped its meek, by-leave-of-Mr. Blaine air, and from this time on it will fight for Mr. Harrison's nomination. The anti's also, under comand of Boss Clarkson, have their fighting blood up, and the wounds left by the battle royal that is to be fought at Minneapolis will make it all the easier to elect the ticket at Chicago. Mr. Cleveland's friends are anxious for the republicans to nominate Blaine, as they believe his nomination will remove all they are confident that they would beat Blaine worse than he did in 1884.

The action of the democratic caucus in deciding to push the regular appropriation bills, in the House, ahead of everything else, and to secure an adjournment at the earliest possible date, was disappointing to many members interested in legislation which they had hoped to have disposed of at this session, but the very large majority by which the caucus adopted it demonstrated that it was deemed the broper action to take. There can be no doubt that the sooner the House can pass all of the necessary appropriation bills and demonstrate to the country that it is ready for an adjournment, the better it will be for the democratic party.

The refusal of Secretary Rusk to ask congress for an appropriation to be spent by the alleged rain-maker, Dyrenforth, had no affect upon that cheeky and slick-tongued individual. He has talged with such good purpose to the Senate committee on Agriculture that Senator Petigrew offered an amendment to the Agricultural bill appropriating $40,000 for rain-making experiment. That is just $15,000 more than Dyrenforth asked for, and he is correspondingly happy; but his jubliation will be short as the House will not allow this money to be thus thrown down a rat-hole, so to speak, whatever the senate may do.

"Teddy" Roosevelt is again after Mr. Wanamaker, whose testimony relating the violations of the Civil Service law by employes of the Baltimore postoffice he says contained "slanderous falsehoods." This is the second time that "Teddy" has publicly accused the Postmaster General of carelessly handling the truth.

Senator Morgan is encouraged by the vote—28 to 17 -by which the Senate defeated Mr. Morrill's motion to refer his resolution, directing the committee on Finance to make an examination and report in relation to currency and coinage, and as to the effect of the act of July, 1890, on the price of silver bullion, to that committee, to hope that the senate will adopt the resolution. Senator Sherman says to adopt the resolution would be to instruct the Finance committee to report a free coinage bill. Only three democratic Senators--Eray, Palmer, and Vilas--voted for Mr. Morrill's motion, the adoption of which would have been considered equivalent to defeating Mr. Morgan's resolution. Senator Hill was present, but he did not vote.

The second National Silver Convention in session here. Among the several hundred delegates from nearly all the States, are a number of people's party men and Knights of Labor. The convention hopes to succeed in getting some silver legislation from Congress.

Secretary Noble has scored another failure in his attempt to get Mr. Harrison to get rid of Commissoner Raum before investigating committee makes its report recommending his removal. Mr. Harrison is said to have told him that he feared the effect on the soldier vote of removing Raum or allowing him to resign and providing for him elsewhere, and had made up his mind to stand by him until after the election.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Crow River Valley.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

INDEPENDENCE-1856-7.

John Quail, an Englishman was an 1856 settler of Independence on land latterly owned by Timothy O'Leary and was a man much respected by his neighbors. After a residence there of a few years he mysteriously disappeared under the following circumstances. He left his residence as his neighbors supposed to be temporarily absent. He never returned and nothing was ever learned by his neighbors in Independence as to what became of him.

Joel Bales an 1856 settler of Greenwood disposing of his claim in that town, bought a claim of John Riley in Independence and became a settler of the latter town during that year.

Some time during the fall of 1858 John Moore a person of an unsound mind, perhaps through some imaginary aggrevance shot William Briggs. The victim lived about one day after receiving the fatal wound. On the trial of Moore for the crime two of his brothers produced evidence satisfactory to the court that he was not of sound mind. Brigg's claim is now the land of C. R. Carlton and Moore's claim is now the land of Gustave Hildebrand.

GREENWOOD-1856-7.

The survey and final location of the territorial road authorized by act of the Legislature, Feb. 1856, to be laid out from Minneapolis via Greenwood to Forest City, which instead of coming direct into the townsite of Greenwood in its approach from Minneapolis to Crow River made a detour by way of Rockford and entered the village of Greenwood on the west side of the river. This location was not satisfactory to the citizens of Greenwood as they expected by the title of the act of the Legislature that the approach and departure from Greenwood would be direct, so the citizens of that village, in order to obtain a direct route to Minneapolis opened the road running east from Greenwood and along the shore of Lake Sarah and connected it with the survey of the territorial road near the southeast corner of the township of Greenwood. This road was opened in October 1856 by voluntary labor on the part of J. F. Powers, Samuel Allen, J. D. Young, Isaac Pierre or Per and Matthew Taisey during a season of inclement weather, in which these parties were exposed to rain and cold; evening seldom finding them with dry clothing. They succeeded however in getting a road fairly passable for that day and time. This road was legalized by survey embodied in order of County Board May 13, 1858, and in order to connect this road with that part of the territorial road leading from the west side of Crow river, to Forest City it was necessary to erect a bridge across that river at Greenwood, so during the year 1857 a bridge of 720 feet in length, of timber taken from the surrounding forest, with a covering of tamarack poles, was constructed mostly if not entirely from voluntary contribution of labor and material by citizens of Greenwood and of the country extending many miles beyond Crow River. The bridge was a valuable affair to the pioneers of Crow River Valley.

J. F. Powers now in his declining years, four score, has been an enterprising citizen and was untiring in his efforts to make a town at the forks of Crow river, finally when the current of events rendered that scheme impracticable, he removed to Delano and contributed no small part to the growth of that village.

A plat and survey of Greenwood was filed in the Register of Deeds' office, in Hennepin Co., March 14, 1857, with Matthew and Albert Taisey as proprietors.

Up to 1857 Greenwood had no hotel. Strangers coming to that forest hamlet were hospitably entertained by residents. In 1857 Albert H. Taisey opened a hotel which was known as the Beaver House.

In 1857 a mail route was established on the territorial road, with the following places and parsons as postmasters, viz: Medicine Lake, Frances Huot P. M.; Rockford, D. R. Farnham, P. M.; Greenwood, J. F. Powers, P. M. —— Lovering was mail contractor.

About 1857-8 there was a mail route in existence running from St. Peter by John McGary's (Independence) to Greenwood and Dayton. The mail was carried by Weego & Lawson under usual mail contracts. The mail route did not prove to be a paying operation to the government or contractors and was discontinued. Weego has since been County Treasurer of Carver county.

The following parties were 1857 settlers of the north part of Greenwood township: Christian Sipe, of Pennsylvania and family of which Ephriam Sipe was a member.

A number of the settlers in the north part of the township of Greenwood found their way to their locations by traveling the Rockford Road to where it intersected the north line of Medina at N. G. Leighton's; from there they followed the road running by Israel Dorman's, P. O'Loughlin's and —— Case's to their settlement in Greenwood township.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD.

Rockford celebrated decoration day as usual. The old soldiers and citizens gathered at the City Hall and marched to Elmwood cemetery where they decorated the many graves of the departed strangers and friends with flowers and evergreens. A speaker from Minneapolis delivered a memorial oration.

Rev. Wm. Campbell, of Delano, preached in the Presbyterian church Sunday morning.

During the high water in Crow river a few days ago the runway between the flour mill and pail factory gave way and about sixteen feet floated off, giving the water a chance to undermine the latter mill and but for the timely work of a few men the building would have been washed into the stream.

Fletcher Powers Sundayed in Rockford.

A number of witnesses attended the bastardy case in Minneapolis Tuesday. The complaint was made by Pauline Ronks against Fred Hazeir, of Greenwood township.

There will not be very many from this part of the country who will attend the National Republican convention at Minneapolis although the "Soo" Line have a rate of fare one way for the round trip. The seats appear to be too high price for most of us.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Powers spent decoration day in Rockford.

The train leaves Rockford in the morning going east at 8:24 and the evening train west arrives at 6:55 P. M. This gives us plenty of time in the city to do business.

D. D. Ames is adding another story to his shop and fixing the second story for office rooms to be used by Dr. Ames in the near future.

There has been considerable sickness in this vicinity the past week and the doctors are kept busy day and night.

There seems to be quite a tangle in reporting history of early days in and about old Greenwood. At that time your correspondent was quite a youngster and I remember some little about it, but as I am not in the race will have nothing to say. There is one thing I do remember that the 4th of July came around just as often then as it does now but did not have quite so much brass band parade in it.

Quite a number of ladies from the interior of Independence went by the overland route to Rockford one day last week.

G. N. Elliot has gone to Minnetonka to put up a windmill for George Phillips. Have your mills in order and the National Republican Convention at Minneapolis, which convenes the 7th of this month will furnish you wind enough to run your mill for a whole year. There is quite a good many hucksters through the country buying up eggs and chickens, we presume to feed the multitudes at the coming convention. No doubt these fellows are like the Methodist ministers were when your correspondent was a boy, very fond of chicken, and I was kept groomed and ready to run down a chicken on first sight of a preacher but now-a-days chicken is not quite so common with the clergy. J. H. MCGARY.

A Farmer on the Tariff.

ST. MICHAELS, May 29th 1892.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE.—The Buffalo Journal says: "If it is good for the farmer to take off the tariff on wool it will be well to take off the duty on wheat," or words to that effect. Let the Journal abolish the tariff on farm produce by all means, but on wool and woolen goods also, and the farmers will be thankful to him for it. Last year we sold our wool at 20 cts a pound, but this year with McKinley's extra tariff on, 17 cts. a pound is the price. The manufacturers mix our wool with foreign wool and imported wool being so much higher they pay so much less for domestic wool. As to tariff on wheat they may impose a duty of $1.00 a bushel and the price will not go up one cent or they may put wheat on the free list and the price will not drop one cent. If, what God forbid, we once should have to import bread stuffs then a duty on wheat would mean higher prices. Mr. Eaton certainly knows that and if every farmer knew it as well as he does they would all become free traders. But then high protective tariff is the shiboleth of the Republican party. That duty on wheat and other farm produce was put on to fool the farmers and a good many farmers there are yet who believe in it, but the party leaders know better; if they did not they would not have brains enough to play the role they are doing.

Small grain looks well but cornplanting has been retarded; some have not got through plowing yet and roads are in a fearful condition, a little worse and communication with St. Michaels village will be almost impossible. Dry weather for a week or two is the cry now. Yours sincerely,
MICHAEL JAEB.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR says there is room only for two more monuments in Westminster abbey, and this space is reserved for those to Gladstone and Tennyson.

THE original manuscript of the "Book of Mormon" is now in one of the banks at Richmond, Ray county, Mo., in custody of J. D. Whitner, a straight and apparently nonpolygamous Mormon.

THE oldest hotel in Switzerland and probably in the world is the hotel of the Three Kings at Basle. Among its guests in 1026 were Emperor Conrad II., his son Henry III. and Rudolph, the last king of Burgundy.

EDWIN C. MCCABE, who is engineering the movement to make Oklahoma a negro state, was formerly state auditor of Kansas, is almost a white man, and is said to be quite intellectual. There are 20,000 negroes now in Oklahoma, it is stated, and 200,000 in the south organized for the same destination.

JOHN H. MCCORMICK, one of the oldest employes in the bindery of the government printing office at Washington, has just died. Mr. McCormick was one of the men who carried President Lincoln from Ford's theater on the night of the assassination to the house opposite, where the martyred president breathed his last.

UNCLE SAM has lost and Mexico gained a strip of ground averaging a mile in width across the southwestern border. It came from an error in a survey and was not detected until after the treaty had closed the way for making a correction. It is arid land and is not likely to be of any large value until the climate changes or water is poured upon it by artificial means.

THE plan for a great line of American steamships to Europe grows apace. The ships will start from an eastern point of Long Island and touch at the nearest point of land east of the Atlantic. Connection from New York and London to the points of arrival and departure will be by the fastest railway trains. The ocean transit will be made in much less time than heretofore.

LETITIA TYLER SEMPLE, daughter of ex-President Tyler, and formerly a "lady of the white house," is now, at 82, a friendless, penniless inmate of the Corcoran home for aged women in Washington. Almost within sight of the old home where she was courted and feted in the days of her youth and bellehood she sits and awaits the end with her grief and her memories for company.

REV. SHELDON JACKSON, in charge of the thirty-four government schools of Alaska, is sailing northward on the Bear to Siberia to purchase the five hundred reindeer which the government hopes to make the foundation of a new food supply for the half-starved Alaskans. The reindeer will first be put in charge of the brighter scholars of the school, and in time are expected to multiply and become the chief staple of Alaskan food.

THE Johnstown relief commission has finished its work and rendered its accounts. The sum of nearly $3,000,000 was disbursed in caring for the victims of the Pennsylvania flood, burying the dead and restoring the town. The great disaster occurred three years ago the 31st of May. It was the monumental calamity of the country. But the mighty deluge of waters was matched by the flood of charity let loose in response to Johnstown's appeal for help.

THE question of "good common roads" is beginning to take prominence in all the wide-awake states. There is no question in which all classes of people are more directly interested. The ordinary methods of road-making and road-repairing are only "playing at road-making." "The iron horse" has solid road beds, beautifully ballasted and bridged — but the faithful four-legged horse goes on miring and wearing out his life in pulling the farmer's wealth to market. The times are ripe for a reform in country-road building.

MRS. CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, the only woman graduate of the law school of Pennsylvania university, received a circular inviting her to attend the recent alumni banquet, and to send a subscription of ten dollars. She accepted the invitation and sent the subscription. A few days later the secretary wrote her that the committee had overlooked the fact that there was one lady among the graduates of the law deparment, and asked her to withdraw her subscription, as arrangements had been made for smoking between the courses. Her subscription was returned to her.

FROM several portions of the United States the suggestion is made that the schools of the country on October 12 next unite in celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, and thus, as one enthusiastic writer puts it, "a wave of patriotic sentiment will sweep with the sun across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and will do much, it is hoped, to inspire afresh the feeling of Americanism in the breasts of the generation just coming upon the scene of active endeavor." A very good idea. The children of the public schools cannot imbibe too much patriotism.

DURING the twelve months ended with last April 176 new national banks were added to the number previously in existence, increasing the total capital by $17,130,000. Of this number eighty-nine, with a capital of $3,580,000, were incorporated in the first half of the term. The number for the entire year is larger than that in 1885, 1886, or 1888, but falls below the 307 reported for the year ended with October, 1890, the capital stock of which was $36,250,000. Most of the new banks are incorporated in the west, there is not a territory unrepresented, and the six states admitted since 1888 gain fifteen new banks.

LATER NEWS.

Corn Corner.

CHICAGO, May 31.—The culmination of the corner in May corn to-day resulted in an extraordinary scene on the floor of the board of trade.

A dollar a bushel was the price demanded by the clique that had secured control of nearly the entire supply available in this market. The crowd of traders in the corn pit occupied every inch of room and far exceeded the wheat crowd in dimensions, to say nothing of lung power. Samuel Adams and other clique brokers were incessantly bidding $1, while Baxter and another set howled offers at $1.02 for Coster & Martin. The pressure became so great that Coster & Martin had to post assigment and the corner collapsed. Prices immediately dropped 50 cents per bushel.

AN explosion in the coal mine at Wilkesbarre, Pa., the 31st, killed one man and injured eight others.

THEY ARE REMEMBERED.

Flowers and Flags Decorate the Graves of Fallen Heroes—General Observance of Memorial Day—The President Assists in Unveiling a Monument at Rochester, N. Y.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 31.—The dedication of the monument to the soldiers and sailors of Monroe county was made the occasion of the first visit that Rochester ever had from a president of the United States. Gov. Flower and staff are also here, and this is an honor which citizens fully appreciate. The greatest expectations indulged in concerning the occasion were fully realized. The city was in gala attire and crowds greeted every appearance of the president at railroad stations, hotels and churches since his arrival Saturday night. At 10 o'clock the president and governor held a big reception at Powers' hotel, lasting until noon.

Exercises at the unveiling of the monument were preceded by an immense parade, in which the participants were veterans of the civil war in G. A. R. posts and other military organizations, 2,000 German-Americans, 2,000 children of public and parochial schools and 2,000 members of other organizations. The procession was reviewed in front of the courthouse by the president, Secretary Noble, Maj. Gen. Schofield, Gens. Hooker and Henderson, Frederick Douglass and members of the president's party, including several ladies from Washington, Gov. Flower and staff. The reviewing party afterward entered their carriages and followed the line through the principal streets to Washington square, where the monument was unveiled, the exercises including an address of welcome by Gen. John A. Reynolds, master of ceremonies; an oration by Dr. David J. Hill, president of the University of Rochester; a poem by Samuel H. Lowe, former editor of the Rochester Herald; brief remarks by President Harrison and Gov. Flower, and addresses of presentation and acceptance of the monument. It is estimated that 10,000 persons were in the procession.

NEW YORK, May 31.—Memorial day was marked by the usual suspension of business, a lavish display of flags at half mast and the decoration of statutes in Union and Madison squares with flowers. From early in the morning the streets from Central park to Union square were scenes of gatherings of soldiery, veteran, regular and militia for the annual parade. The grand army turned out in full force and was honored by an imposing escort, including the regular troops stationed in this city, the national guard, naval reserve, Sons of Veterans and old guard. After the dismissal of the parade many posts went to the various cemeteries where flowers were laid upon the graves.

The services at Gen. Grant's tomb drew a multitude to Riverside park in the afternoon, where the programme included music by the choir, ceremonies according to the ritual of the grand army, oration by Gen. Horace Porter, of the staff of Gen. Grant, national salute by a vessel of the United States navy.

Commander in Chief Palmer presided at the memorial services at Carnegie music hall this evening, where W. Bourke Cochran was the orator. The programme included an address by Commander Palmer and musical selections.

CHICAGO, May 31.—Under dull, gray skies that might have wept their torrents for the silent graves of a nation's martyred dead Decoration day was observed Monday in Chicago. The day dawned clear and warm. Toward noon thin clouds obscured the sun and at 1 o'clock the rain came down hopelessly. In spite of it all tens of thousands were abroad in the streets; in the cemeteries flowers were laid upon the graves of the soldier dead, and to the strains of martial music citizens and soldiery, 10,000 strong, marched through the streets.

Dispatches from various points in Illinois show that the day was generally observed throughout the state.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Memorial day was generally observed Monday, perhaps more closely than ever before. The people turned out to the cemeteries and assisted in the exercises over the graves of the fallen heroes of the late war.

There were the usual formal observances at the cemetery on Arlington Heights, at the soldiers' home and at the Congressional cemetery. At the latter burying ground fully 50,000 persons were present, and a pretty feature of the procession was the participation of not less than 1,000 children. Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, and Representative Owen Scott, of Illinois, were the orators of the occasion.

At the soldiers' home Mrs. Gen. John A. Logan was one of the most prominent, and after the speeches had been delivered the tomb of Gen. Logan was the first one visited and decorated. Mrs. Logan, in conformity with her annual custom, had the tomb almost hidden beneath wreaths and flowers. Gen. Bussey assistant secretary of the interior, made the speech.

At Arlington, Sheridan's tomb was a perfect bower of roses worked in handsome and appropriate designs, one of the most conspicuous of which was a huge wreath of Jacqueminots sent by President Harrison. The oration was delivered by Gen. D. H. Hastings, of Pennsylvania.

FRIGHTFUL HAVOC.

The Cyclone's Awful Work in Kansas—Thriving Cities Laid Waste—A Total of Thirty-three Lives Lost—Enormous Damage to Property.

WELLINGTON, Kan., May 30.—The mighty tornado which formed in Harper county Friday night swept across the counties of Harper and Sumner. To add to the havoc wrought by the twisting storm a waterspout claimed its share of the general wreck and devastated the northern part of Harper county, while lightning added its fires. Trees, barns, farmhouses and whole towns went down before the terrible force of the storm and human life went out in the twinkling of an eye. Fifteen dead at Wellington, seven at Harper and five at Argonia compose the list of victims in the towns, while from the country districts come reports of six killed, making a total of thirty-three dead.

ANTHONY, Kan., May 30.—The cyclone which swept through the city of Harper Friday night at 7:30 o'clock destroyed many lives, injured a large number of people and did an immense amount of pecuniary damage. The scene in the devastated town is one of ruin and destitution. Hardly a building in the entire town escaped demolition, and the place is strewn with debris from end to end. It is almost a miracle that more lives were not lost, as the death list contains now only six names. Many were seriously injured and scores received slight wounds.

Nothing escaped the storm's fury, and great damage is not only done to houses and crops and trees, but thousands of dollars' worth of stock has been killed and injured. It is impossible at present to estimate the entire loss sustained by the city and surrounding country with any degree of accuracy, but men who have traveled over its course say that it will not fail far short of $500,000. Not more than six out of the 800 or 900 residences of the city have escaped damage.

WELLINGTON, Kan., May 30.—Not until day broke Saturday was it possible for any one to realize the volume of destruction by the cyclone Friday night. Even then it was impossible to compute the damage to property and the loss of life with anything like accuracy. What is known to a certainty is that seventeen lives were lost and more than $500,000 damage was done in this city. The list of dead will be greatly enlarged beyond a doubt, for many of those who were hurt but are still alive cannot recover from their injuries. There are still in the ruins of the Phillips house, Standard block and other buildings perhaps a dozen bodies. No one knows how many. But forty or more persons are reported to be missing.

SUMNER, Ill., May 30.—A cyclone did some bad work a few miles north of this city Saturday night at 9 o'clock, but no loss of life is reported. The storm passed in a northeasterly direction and whenever the funnel-shaped cloud struck the ground it took everything with it. The residence of Ben Barker was completely demolished and not a building remains on his farm. His cattle were somewhat injured. All that saved his family was the kitchen stove. Mrs. Barker had presence of mind enough to throw a bucket of water on the fire and then gathered her children and secreted herself by the stove. The house was lifted up and the roof fell on the stove and Mrs. Barker crawled out from her secreted place without a scratch. The home of George Daniels was badly damaged and his stock injured. Several trees were uprooted in this city. The Prairie Hall church was almost completely blown down.

CALDWELL, Kan., May 31.—Two distinct tornadoes passed from southwest to northeast north of Caldwell Sunday night. One man is known to have been killed and much damage was done to farm property. The funnel-shaped clouds were distinctly visible from both Caldwell and Conway Springs, but no details of the destruction have been obtained yet. The first storm is said to have seemed to carry everything before it, but the swath cut was narrower than usual.

CORWIN, Kan., May 31.—A small tornado passed north of this city, doing an immense amount of damage to the farming community, uprooting trees and tearing down dwellings and barns. No report of loss of life or injuries has been received. One farmer lost ten head of cows and three horses.

WELLINGTON, Kan., May 31.—The most terrific rainstorm that ever visited this section fell between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock Monday morning. The water came down in torrents, and the streets were running rivers within ten minutes. Unroofed stores and residences were flooded, greatly adding to the misery and distress caused by the recent tornado. Merchandise in the debris which could have been saved with partial damage is now ruined. About twenty prominent firms, occupying unroofed buildings, are more or less damaged. Many destitute people are sick and suffering for the want of food, clothing and shelter and it is an utter impossibility for those who still have their houses intact to accommodate all. The situation can be better appreciated when it is understood that before the tornado there was not an empty house in the city fit for habitation. A large force of laborers are at work rebuilding the partially wrecked buildings.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 31.—Judge Moon of the circuit court broke his own and all other previous records in the divorce court Saturday. He sat for 150 minutes and averaged one and a third minutes to each case.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

LOVED A SAILOR.

Sequel to a Pretty Romance Found in a Minneapolis Divorce Court.

The sequel to a pretty little romance was wrought out in the divorce court at Minneapolis. Back in 1887 William H. Trigg, the son of an English gentleman, was running as a captain of a ship from Halifax to Montreal. He met on the Nova Scotia coast a healthy, robust girl named Harriet Taylor and married her in September, 1887. He kept her with him on the ship for a couple of months, when his ardor cooled and he returned her to her father's roof. He continued to support her, however, until the following February, when he took command of a ship running from Liverpool via the Suez canal to Mediterranean ports and has since done nothing for her. Judge Lochren gave her a divorce.

THE LAW STANDS.

School Districts in Minnesota Get the Benefit of Liquor Licenses.

The state supreme court in a case brought before it has decided the special law providing for the payment to a particular school district of the money received from the sale of liquor licenses in a village embraced within such district to be constitutional. The court holds that this special act does not conflict, as has been claimed, with certain clauses of the constitution, since it is not a grant of corporate privilege nor yet a special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise within the meaning of those clauses.

Too Much of a Sport.

Frederick W. Germain, of St. Paul, aged 25, seeks a divorce from his wife, Margaret V. Germain. They were married at Hudson less than three years ago. He charges that during the time they lived together she was irregular in her conduct. He alleges that she is residing at the Hotel Brunswick, in Minneapolis, that she has a room at Fourth and Nicollet streets where she has a suit of male attire and a wig. These, he says, she has frequently donned and gone out with a male friend to "do" the town.

The Homeopathists.

The Minnesota State Homeopathic institute in twenty-sixth annual session at Duluth elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Died Suddenly.

A private dispatch announced the sudden death of R. P. Herrick, a well known citizen of Crookston. He was on his way to New York and died a couple of hours after reaching his destination, of rheumatism of the heart. He was a member of the wealthy milling firm of Lee & Herrick. A few months ago his senior partner became suddenly insane and is now confined in the Fergus Falls asylum. The firm's extensive business at Crookston is left without a head.

Hunting for a Miser's Money.

A somewhat eccentric character named Eli Ebor, aged 77 years, died at Fisher. For the past twelve years he lived in a rude hut erected in the timber, and eked out an existence from the sale of vegetables and fish. It was generally believed, however, that he died possessed of upwards of $20,000. Already about one acre of cleared and two acres of timber land about his hut have been dug up by parties eager to find hidden treasure, but no money had been found.

Minnesota Lard Laws Valid.

In the state supreme court at St. Paul Judge Mitchell sustained the validity of the laws relating to the manufacture and sale of lard compounds. The suits were appealed from the municipal court of Minneapolis, where Knute Aslesen was convicted of selling cotolene and C. M. Bassett of selling food prepared with this article without furnishing the purchaser with a card containing notice of that fact.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—William Waldorf Astor is reported from Europe to be writing a novel of the fifteenth century. When he wants to describe a certain kind of room he has one fitted up in exactly the way he desires it, regardless of expense.

—Mrs. Ella W. Peattie, who, under the title of "With Scrip and Staff," has written for children a story of mediæval flavor and of surpassing interest, is an Omaha newspaper woman whose name has become familiar to eastern readers through the excellent short stories she has written for the magazines.

—Secretary Elkins, it is said, has more callers than any previous secretary since the war. He is besieged from the moment he is out of bed until he is in it. The secretary's family at last accounts had been permitted to eat but one meal, since they moved into the Washington house, without strangers present.

—The crown prince of Roumania is a Hohenzollern, and, therefore, a member of the house of the German emperor. He is twenty-seven, and the kingdom over which, in the natural order of events, he will reign, is only eleven years old. The Roumanian crown is made of metal from the cannon taken by the Roumanians from the Turks at Plevna in 1877.

—Mlle. Elise St. Omer, the celebrated French explorer, travels without any luggage, not even a hand-bag. All she requires is stowed away in her capacious pockets. Thus equipped, this energetic lady has traveled through all parts of Europe, Asia and America; has visited Mormons, Japanese and Cingalese, ridden side by side with Bedouins and climbed the Himalayas.

—Few people bear in mind the fact that Louise Michel, the heroine of the Paris commune, is a poetess, or was once, for she writes only prose nowadays. She is sixty-two years old and lives in a garret in Paris. She is a quiet little woman. Even when most excited she speakes in a monotone, and her favorite position in speaking is to sit behind a table with her hands clasped before her. Her only gesture is made by moving the palm of one hand across the other.

—The other day a party of gentlemen, comprising Grand Dukes Alexis and Vladimir, the duc de Morny and others, set off toward the Place Maubert, the center of Paris Whitechapel. They visited the house kept by the "Pere Lubette," the Ste. Genevieve ball-room, where Duke Alexis was astonished to find that many poor men, who probably had not dined, were paying a penny for each dance they went through, and danced all the evening.

—Maj. Tasumasa Fukushima, the Japanese gentleman who is riding from Berlin to Vladivostock in the saddle, is making slow progress. A pedestrian could easily keep up with him. Although there is nothing wonderful in his undertaking, he is met at every town with a big crowd and sometimes with courteous military attentions. The major is of small stature, being half a head shorter than the shortest Russian officer, and slight in proportion, though very muscular. His horse, Alhambra, is of an English breed.

—The Marquis Hosokawa has been dunned for a debt contracted by his ancestor, Hosokawa Etchu-no-Kami, in the fifteenth year of Genroku, or 1702. Hosokawa Etchu-no-Kami borrowed three hundred koban from his business agent, Oinuma Sanemori. The time for which the money was lent was not specified in the deed, but the Hosokawa family were held liable whenever payment might be demanded. The deed has been preserved by six generations of the Oinuma family, and has at last been presented for payment. Japanese law, however, will let the present marquis off.

THE FARMER.

The king may rule o'er land and sea,
The lord may live right royally,
The soldier ride in pomp and pride,
The sailor roam o'er ocean wide;
But this or that, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

The writer thinks, the poet sings,
The craftsman fashions wondrous things,
The doctor heals, the lawyer pleads,
The miner follows the precious leads;
But this or that, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

The merchant he may buy and sell,
The teacher do his duty well;
But men may toil through busy days,
Or men may stroll through pleasant ways;
From king to beggar, whate'er befall
The farmer he must feed them all.

The farmer's trade is one of worth:
He's partner with the sky and earth,
He's partner with the sun and rain,
And no man loses for his gain;
And men may rise, or men may fall,
But the farmer he must feed them all.

God bless the man who sows the wheat,
Who finds us milk and fruit and meat;
May his purse be heavy, his heart be light,
His cattle and corn and all go right;
God bless the seeds his hands let fall,
For the farmer he must feed us all.

THE TWO MIGGSES.

The Story of a Misunderstood Nature.

"I think it's an outrage!"

"I should say it was. When we can scarcely stand one Miggs, the idea of having two Miggses thrust upon us!"

Miss Clara entered the room just in time to hear the last remark. "I hope the members of my mission band are not engaged in talking against their neighbors," she said gravely.

There was a deep silence for a moment; then Edith Lyle asked thoughtfully: "Miss Clara, do you think a school-teacher ought to be cross?"

"And scold half the time?" added another girl.

"And wear shabby dresses?" said a third.

"And fix her hair in the very horridest fashion she can think of?" was the question of a fourth.

"As I am not acquainted with any such person," said Miss Clara, quietly, "I am scarcely prepared to answer your questions."

"Oh! but you do know our teacher, Miss Miggs, and she is guilty of every one of these charges," exclaimed Etta Wright, impulsively; "and not one of us can endure her, yet her sister has been appointed assistant. It is awful to think of having two Miggses!"

"I say so, too," said Annie Jennings, boldly.

The other girls looked up anxiously to see what reply Miss Clare would make to these assertions. Miss Clare was the very picture of neatness and sweetness and gentleness. This her Sabbath-school girls had repeatedly affirmed. In fact, they believed that she was everything that is requisite to make up the perfect lady. They knew she could not sanction carelessness of dress or hasty temper, and surely she must side with them in this case.

Much to their disappointment, she quietly dismissed the subject by promising to take it up at some future time. "But now for business, girls. How many aprons are we going to make this afternoon?"

"Oh! ever so many if you will read to us while we sew."

"I thought of telling you a story instead of reading it. How will that suit?"

"Better! better!" cried a number of the girls, simultaneously, and the other ones also agreeing, Miss Clare began:

"Several years ago there lived in the village of Cressbury a girl by the name of Julia Hagermann. Julia was fonder of study than the majority of girls of her age, but her favorite subject was music. Indeed, her love for that was passionate, and her greatest joy was to sit before a piano. But such instruments were not plentiful in those days, and the Hagermanns were too poor to afford one. Sometimes Julia would find a chance to run into a neighbor's where there was a piano and spend a few minutes trying to teach herself from the beginning of the exercise book; but these spare minutes were scarce, for there was a great deal of work to be done in the Hagermann family, and, as Julia was the eldest child, the bulk of it fell to her lot. She often thought if she only had a piano she would practice early and late in the hope of becoming a fine musician; then what wondrous things she would accomplish for her family!

"One day an uncle of Julia's died and left her some money. She had been his favorite niece, and he wished her to spend the money just as she pleased; he thought there was probably enough to purchase the long-wished-for piano. You may be sure that Julia was very happy when the money came into her possession; and she had begun to wonder what kind of a piano it was best for her to buy, when she overheard her father saying that unless he could raise money to liquidate a certain debt his creditor would make considerable trouble for him. The money ought to be ready the following day, and Mr. Hagermann had no way of raising it. The amount he owed was about equal to the sum Julia had for the piano, and the unselfish girl went at once to her father laid the money in his hand, and said: 'Take this. I can wait for my piano.'

"'The look of unutterable relief that came into his face when I gave it to him more than repaid me for the sacrifice,' Julia afterward said to her mother.

"'My precious girl!' Mr. Hagermann cried, 'it shall not be for long. You'll have a piano as soon as I can get it, though I am compelled to work day and night for the money.'

"A short time after that Mr. Hagermann was accidentally killed, and thus Julia lost a kind and loving father. This was the first great sorrow of her life. But though the family was deprived of the principal bread-winner and found it very difficult to make both ends meet, Julia still clung to the hope of owning a piano and becoming a musician. She attended school, and worked hard before and after school hours to help her mother support the family. When she was sixteen years of age their circumtances improved somewhat, for two of the boys were then working, and Julia and her mother were plentifully supplied with sewing, for which they were well paid. Thus they managed to save money to buy a piano, but when once more ready to make the purchase were again prevented. It had become necessary for Mrs. Hagermann's mother to live with them, and she was such a nervous old lady that the children constantly annoyed her by their boisterous ways; therefore the doctor advised Mrs. Hagermann to take her to an old ladies' home. The one he recommended was an excellent institution, but a certain sum of money must be paid before she could enter. The grandmother went gladly, but she never knew that Julia's piano money was again sacrificed for another's good.

"The following year Mrs. Hagermann married a man who proved to be intemperate and brutal. No one but the family will ever know the suffering he caused them until they were relieved of his presence by death. About this time Julia graduated and received an appointment as teacher in a school near home. Now, she thought, she would surely realize her fondest hopes; but as fast as she saved money it was needed for something in the family. Finally diphtheria entered the home and took away the three boys, leaving of the children only Julia and a little girl four years old. The expense and sorrow this occasioned you can imagine; I shall not attempt to describe it. Then came the saddest affliction of all. The trouble through which she passed had caused such a strain on Mrs. Hagermann's mind that she went hopelessly insane. Of course she had to be removed to an asylum; and Julia became a mother to little Elsie. 'Then I gave up all hope of becoming a musician,' she said to me with tears that would not be kept back. 'All I can do is to live for Elsie and my poor mother.'

"The mother is dead, and the little sister is grown up now and hopes to be able at least partly to repay Julia for her devotion; but she cannot give her back the buoyancy of youth or the healthy body and nerves that accompanied it. How do you think a class ought to treat a teacher who has experienced so much trouble?"

"With kindness, of course," said one of the girls, quickly.

"Even though she is cross sometimes, and cannot smile because she is unable to forget how her poor mother died?" added Miss Clare.

"Why, yes, they ought to make allowance for her," said Annie Jennings.

"Even though she dresses shabbily and wears her hair in an unbecoming style?" still further questioned Miss Clare.

"Oh! you can't — you surely can't mean Miss Miggs?" cried Josie Thayer.

"Of course not," said Etta Wright, decidedly; "this lady was named Hagermann."

"But, my dear," returned Miss Clare, "you remember her mother married again. The second husband was named Miggs. That was another of Julia's sacrifices. She took the name 'Miggs' to please her mother, though she disliked it very much."

"Then it was our Miss Miggs, after all," exclaimed Edith Lyle. "O girls! how shamefully we have treated her!"

"And we have been so annoying today," said Etta, penitently.

"It is useless to spend time in vain regret over the past, my dears. We can only make up for mistakes by doing better in the future. When you are again tempted to judge a person, remember that there may be circumstances which excuse the faults that you are so quick to notice."

Meanwhile Miss Miggs sat alone in her room grieving over her failures in school work. It had been an exceedingly trying day, and she had lost her temper a number of times. How could she control those large scholars and win respect from the little ones? Furthermore, how could she bear to have gentle Elsie come and witness her impatience and lack of success? These questions still remained unsettled when she started wearily to school the following day.

But during the first session it seemed to her that she had somehow solved the problems after all. The girls had never behaved so well, and the boys appeared to profit by their example. In fact, teaching had never before been so pleasant and easy; she did not lose her temper once through the day, and at three o'clock, when her scholars bid her good afternoon pleasantly, the poor teacher wondered if she could possibly be dreaming. But no, there was the same state of affairs day after day; the girls and boys who had been most troublesome seemed to be making a decided effort to behave well; there was a marked improvement in the conduct of the whole school, and when Elsie appeared to take charge of the little ones, Miss Miggs was proud to introduce the scholars to her. As for Miss Elsie, the girls immediately fell in love with her charming face and manners. "She is just as pretty and lovely as she can be," was the verdict; "doesn't look one bit like her sister."

But after awhile they noticed that Miss Miggs seemed to be growing younger and better looking. Elsie was the fairy that brought the transformation; she dressed her sister's hair becomingly and saw that she had clothing suitable for a school-teacher. "You can afford it, dear, you know," she said to Julia one day. "You must not spend another cent on me now."

But the most beautiful light came into Miss Miggs' eyes the day the trustees sent a piano to the school. The larger scholars had secretly demanded it, and the morning it arrived they rejoiced with exceeding great joy because of the happiness it caused their teacher.

"Miss Miggs is almost handsome today!" exclaimed Etta Wright. "How happiness does beautify one's countenance!"

Miss Miggs thinks she is too old now to attempt becoming a grand musician, but it would do you good to see the comfort afforded her by that piano.—S. Jennie Smith, in Demorest's Magazine.

Big Coins.

The subject of one pound notes and gold coins is just now almost monopolizing discussion in the British islands. In the way of large gold coins, however, there are one or two countries that leave England far behind, as, for example, here in the United States we have ten and twenty dollar pieces with few pieces of the smaller denominations. Austro-Hungary has $9.16 pieces, the condor in Chili $9.12, and double condor, or $19.30, in Coloma and Ecuador. The largest gold coin now in existence is said to be the gold ingot, or "loof" of Annam—a flat, round gold piece worth about $316.75—the value being written upon it in Indian ink. Such a lump of gold must be somewhat inconvenient to carry. Next in size of the "loof" comes the "obang" of Japan, worth about $50, and then the "benda" of Ashantee, worth about $45. In silver coins, also, Annam likewise claims to have the largest in the world, the silver ingot there being worth $14.75. The Chinese "tael" stands second, while Austria occupies the third place with its double thaler.—Bankers' Eclectic.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—The gold-thread used so much in embroidery is apt to become dull or tarnished, but if it is pure it can be brightened by pressing it with a moderately hot flat-iron.

—To keep seeds from the depredations of vermin mix some small pieces of camphor with them. Camphor placed in trunks or drawers will prevent mice from doing injury to the contents.

—Dripped Coffee: Allow one tablespoonful of coffee to each person, and "two for the pot;" put in a dripper and pour boiling water slowly, let set a moment and pour through the dripper a second time.—Home.

—Cinnamon Cake: Take some bread dough when it is just ready to bake, work a little fresh lard or butter in it, roll it out, sprinkle well with granulated sugar, butter, and cinnamon.—Household Monthly.

—Plain Omelet: Beat the yelks and whites of two eggs separately. Mix one small teaspoonful of flour with a little milk. Mix all together, and add salt. Fry in a little hot butter, stirring until it begins to thicken, then shake until a golden brown and fold. Parsley or ham can be added.—Detroit Free Press.

—Mayonnaise Dressing: To the yelk of an egg, well beaten, add one saltspoonful of salt and a half saltspoonful each of pepper and mustard; while beating add slowly three tablespoonfuls of salad oil and one of vinegar; beat together well. Beat the white of an egg and pour over the dressing. — N. Y. World.

—Hashed Cold Meat: Take your bones and stew them in a little water with an onion, some salt and pepper, and, if you like, a little savory herbs, when the goodness is all out of the bones, and it tastes nice, thicken the gravy with a teaspoonful of corn starch, and, if it is not very strong, put in a bit of butter, then place your stew-pan on the hot hearth and put in your slices of meat. Warm, but not boil. Serve with toasted bread.—Boston Budget.

—French Pancakes: Beat two eggs thoroughly, add to them two tablespoonfuls of butter beaten to a cream, stir in two ounces of sugar and two ounces of flour; when all are well mixed add enough milk to make a batter; beat and stir well for a few minutes, put it on buttered plates, and bake in a brisk oven for twenty minutes. When done sprinkle white sugar over them and serve very hot with a cut lemon. A lemon or two should be cut in halves and put in a small glass-dish so that those who like the flavor may squeeze a little of the juice over the pancake and then return the lemon to the dish.—Housekeeper.

—Satsuma Jugs: Satsuma jugs, or bowls of less expensive ware, are excellent things in which to plant hyacinths, and they will look well in the center of the table with these flowers growing in them. Cut flowers so soon fade, that unless a hostess wishes her table to be of a certain color, she would better use money for growing plants. She will be surprised at the amount of money saved. Faded flowers can be entirely restored to freshness by clipping the stems and putting them in hot water, away from furnace heat. The hot water sends the sap from the stem up into the flower. Roses have been kept a week by this method.—Food.

—Stewed Lobster: Drain the lobster from the liquor. Melt an ounce of butter in a frying-pan; add the lobster meat and let it simmer for a few minutes, then add salt, pepper and a very scant half pint of stock, or hot water; cover and let simmer three-quarters of an hour. Put in a sucepan half an ounce of butter and half an onion, minced; fry brown, and add two sliced tomatoes, or half a cup of canned, three okra pods, sliced, salt and a drop or two of tobasco sauce. Cook fifteen minutes, add the liquor from the can of lobster, and in about five minutes add it to the stewed lobster. Let all cook five minutes. Add a little lemon juice, and serve.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Death in Bulgaria.

When the head of a Bulgarian family perceives that he is about to die he sends for the priest and begins to bargain with him about the cost of his funeral. The moment he dies all pots, pans and kettles in the house are turned upside down to prevent his soul taking refuge in any of them; and great care is taken to prevent either man or animal —especially cat or dog—from stepping across his body, as otherwise, in the opinion of his family, he would turn into a vampire, and so be a continual nuisance to them and their neighbors.—Chicago Times.

"WHO DID WHAT?"

The Story of a Remark That Became a Byword.

Innocent gossip with no malice in it has often a charm for the best of people, as indeed why should it not? The person who takes little interest in the loves and hates, fortunes and misfortunes of his neighbors is far more likely to be the possessor of a cold heart than of a superior mind; but there is such a thing as being too inquisitive.

In the days when our grandmothers were girls there came occasionally into the family of a good deacon with nine children a village dressmaker of the kind immortalized by Mrs. Stowe in "The Minister's Wooing."

She was neither as delightful nor as daring as Miss Prissy, but she had all of that good woman's interest in other people's affairs, and always looked forward with particular pleasure to the week during which she cut and fitted for the deacon's girls, knowing that his house was in some sort a social center, where she was likely to hear plenty of fresh news and entertaining anecdotes.

One day she arrived late for her work, and as she entered the house caught a glimpse of the six daughters already assembled in the family sitting-room with their gowns and patterns, their workboxes and their new roll of "Injy muslin."

But none of them were at work, for one was telling the others a story of such absorbing interest that they sat breathless and spellbound, with hands fallen in their laps or needles suspended in the air.

The sight was too much for the new-comer. With one mitt on and one off, her unfastened pelisse dragging from her shoulders, her bonnet askew and its loosened strings streaming, she appeared suddenly among the astonished girls, crying as she came:

"What? What? What is it? Who did what?"

She was answered, although giving a full answer involved the re-telling of the whole story, but her comprehensive inquiry became thereafter a family byword.

Among the deacon's descendants to this day if one shows signs of too great inquisitiveness, it is sufficient for any other member of the family to ask, with a lift of the eyebrow:

"Who did what?"—Youth's Companion.

PAYING CHINESE SOLDIERS.

The Money Is Pure Silver and Is Weighed Out to Them.

The Chinese soldier receives his pay once a month only, and Chinese months, it may be remembered, are much larger than those we are accustomed to reckon by. On the eve of the pay day the captain of a company, together with his sergeant major, goes and receives the amount of money requisite to pay his company from his next superior officer.

This is not paid to him in jingling coins, but in pure silver, which, however, has been broken into irregular pieces. The whole of the night preceding pay day is occupied in weighing out for each man the required quantity of silver, and this occupation, as may be imagined, is a very tedious one, and only successfully accomplished by infinite care, for here a piece the size of a pin's head has to be chipped off, and there a piece of larger dimensions has to be added to make up weight, and any deviation one way or the other means the loss of perhaps a day's pay or more to some poor defender of the celestial empire.

When the process of meting out is accomplished, the silver is carefully wrapped in paper, upon which is written the name of the intended recipient. On the following afternoon the company is mustered, and the sergeant-major divides the money, commencing with the first man in the company, and going on to the last. When this division is concluded, the question is asked in stentorian tones: "Has anyone else a claim?" and the customary "No" having promptly been given, the men are then dismissed.

Each one now repairs to the nearest tradesman's shop, where he exchanges his silver. For one tael he receives one thousand six hundred small coins called cash, perforated in the center so as to allow being threaded on a string, and, having received the proper amount, turns homewards with a cheerful mien but nearly sinking beneath his burden.

The private receives three and a half taels, equal to about nineteen shillings monthly, out of which he has to provide himself with clothes and food. This, to us, no doubt seems a very insignificant sum, but we must remember that the whole of a Chinese soldier's subsistence only costs him about one tael, for he lives on rice, absolutely nothing but rice. His clothes, too, also cost but a trifle.—Yankee Blade.

Probably not. Even were John's eyes not cut on the bias and his nose broad in the beam, his tint would stamp him as the reverse of beautiful. Biliousness, with its symptoms of furred tongue, yellowish skin and eyeballs, pains in the right side, sick headaches, vertigo, must if unchecked culminate in jaundice and congestion of the liver. FROM THE HEART.

That Is the Way Ministers Speak.

A Most Wonderful Array of Outspoken Statements from Prominent Ministers of the Gospel.

No class of people in the community have a deeper interest in the welfare of the people than Ministers of the Gospel. They are brought close to the members of their congregation, study their wants, and are consulted on all subjects. Of late years, pastors are becoming well-versed in those things which contribute to the physical as well as spiritual comfort of their people. Many pastors are also physicians, and all seek earnestly for those things which they believe to be worthy and valuable.

The following statements made by Ministers of the Gospel, bearing upon this important point are most valuable:

Rev. S. P. Smith, Marblehead, Mass.: "For years I suffered from complications of the liver, which caused biliousness, and finally threw me into bilious fever. I was attended by a skilful physician, but still I suffered periodical bilious attacks and intense pain from the formation of gall-stones. I finally was obliged to suspend my pastoral work, when, after a thorough treatment with a most wonderful cure, I was entirely restored to health and was able to work harder than ever. My appetite returned, my digestion was perfect, and I feel that I owe my restoration entirely to Warner's Safe Cure. I take pleasure in recommending it as a great remedy for all diseases of the liver."

Rev. C. A. Harvey, D. D., Washington, D. C.: "I take pleasure in stating that I have for many years been acquainted with the well-known Warner's Safe Cure, and with its remarkable curative efficiency in obstinate and so-called incurable cases of Bright's disease in this city. In some of these cases, which seemed to be in the last stages, and which had been given up by practitioners of both schools, the speedy change wrought by this remedy seemed but little less than miraculous. I am convinced that for Bright's disease, in all its stages, no remedy heretofore discovered, can be held for one moment in comparison with this."

Rev. Benjamin Hall, New Castle, Westchester Co., N. Y.: "I suffered for a long time from malaria. I ran down in weight 30 pounds, could not sleep, and was unable to take care of my parish. I consulted one of the best pathologists in the City of New York, who found my fluids badly impregnated with albumen mucous, with hyaline casts abundant. I commenced Warner's Safe Cure and began to mend rapidly. My back ceased to ache, the malarial symptoms disappeared, and I now weigh more than ever before. After my recovery I had another analysis made, when my fluid proved to be entirely free from casts, with only a slight trace of albumen. The doctor said the casts were of the most dangerous character, and that I had had a very narrow escape."

Rev. Henry C. Westwood, D. D., Providence, R. I., declares: "Ten years ago I used Warner's Safe Cure and derived so much benefit from it that I was led to voluntarily write a testimonial in its favor. Since then some of my friends have proved the virtues of the medicine, and recently a relative has been greatly relieved by its use. I therefore beg leave to place more emphasis upon the opinion of this remedial agent, expressed by me some ten years ago."

Rev. J. P. Arnold, Camden, Tenn., makes the following statement: "For eight years I suffered from Bright's disease of the kidneys. The torture I endured no tongue can tell. One day I was laid up with an abscess, which discharged pus for twenty months. The best doctors in the country attended me, but could give no relief. Two abscesses were running constantly, and, in fact, they only ceased to run after I began using Warner's Safe Cure, which, I am pleased to say, restored me to perfect health."

Rev. S. B. Bell, D. D., formerly pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Mo., asserts: "I have been most wonderfully delivered from many paroxysms of unendurable torture by Warner's Safe Cure. Its virtues should be known by all the world."

Rev. William C. Powers, Greenwood, S. C., makes the following graphic assertion: "My wife suffered for years from an almost constant disposition to pass urine, which was done with great difficulty and in very small quantities at a time. The pain accompanying the discharge was excruciating. She was treated by three of the most skilful physicians, but without any perceptible improvement. She was completely restored to health by the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

Can you not see that such earnest and outspoken statements as the above come from the heart, that they are sincere, and that they are made because these ministers of the Gospel, know beyond question of what they speak? And does it not show how valuable this great cure becomes to those who are in need?

THE trouble with the man who knows nothing is that he is always the last to find it out.—Ram's Horn.

"August Flower"

"For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. It seemed to do me good at once. I gained strength and flesh rapidly. I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has cured me." Jas. E. Dederick, Saugerties, N.Y.®

—Tom Lanway has come down from Swan River where he has been driving logs. He says too much water caused them to tie up.

—Chauncey M. Depew is booked for a lecture in Minneapolis, Saturday evening June 4, under the auspices of the Minneapolis Press Club.

—Gus Kruger indignantly says he did tell Gutzwiller "You have no more business on the school board than I have" and we believe Gus came very near the truth.

—Wonder what the Eagle thinks "hoodlums" means as that seems to be one of her favorite expressions. Perhaps it's a foreign language, possibly Volapuk.

—When Delano Independent School District gets a principal with time to look after the entire school it will begin to take rank with better schools than at present.

—"Tramp's Daughter" by the Delano Dramatic Club, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Kelly, under the auspices of the Delano Cornet Band, at the City Hall, on Thursday evening, June 9. This will doubtless be an enjoyable occasion as well as financially profitable to the Band.

—R. M. Bohn was arrested by the village of Delano for using abusive language to the village marshall. The trial was had before Justice Catlin and a Jury of twelve. Attorney M. A. O'Hair for the prosecution and O. L. Billings and W. E. Culken for defendant the case ended about 10:30 P. M. last night and after being locked up about half an hour the Jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

—If Mr. Gutzwiller would post up a little bit on parliamentary law he would know that the first man put on a committee is its chairman unless otherwise provided and not be telling the folks that the alleged chairmanship of that waterworks committee, &c, are "fictions" (the correspondent at Rockford's word). But that is in keeping with his knowledge of anatomy when he doubts that Kruger has any brains except what he sits on. As an equal balanced bird the Eagle takes the cake.

—Joe a son of Frank Kuchenmeister while engaged in grubbing on his father's farm four miles west of town met with a serious accident on Friday afternoon. As he was pulling a small stump with the grub hoe he lost his balance and fell partially down throwing his foot in the way of his fathers ax receving a bad cut near the ankle. A surgeon was called, an artery ligated and the wound sewed up and the young man made as comfortable as possible. His father says an instant later he would have struck Joe in the head instead of in the foot.

—Memorial Day, passed off in good shape. The weather was all that could be desired. People came in crowds to take part in the ceremonies in rememberance of those who gave up the best years of their lives and who have died in defence of their country. The processions to the cemetaries would have done credit to a larger place than this. The speaker Cyrus M. King sent a telegraph at the last moment that on account of sickness he could not be present. His place was occupied by Rev. J. R. Davies, O. L. Billings and F. H. Lindsley. The picnic dinner with hot coffee for all given in the hall was appreciated by those who came from a distance as well as by many of the town folks. At the Delano cemetery a touching scene was that of the Delano Band who surrounded the mound covering the remains of J. M. Langford an old band leader of the place, who died in 79 covering the grave with flowers and playing a selection for the occasion Mr. Langford was a stranger here as to his former life but was the friend of all, and deserved the compliment paid him by the survivers of the band.

—The Buffalo Journal gives us credit for "Ketching" our second breath on Tariff is a Tax. He dont deny but what Tariff is a Tax.

—In the Evening Tribune we find among the names of Minnesota couples wedded in Wisconsin recently, John Seibel, farmer, Montrose, to Christine Eppel, May 18, 1892.

—Frank P. Ball, of Garden City, Miss., in a letter to his uncle J. D. Young, of this place, says Frank Swartz took an over dose of morphine from which he died. He had said if he had a gun he would kill himself. Mr. Swartz was formerly a much respected citizen of Delano and has friends and relatives here. He was buried by the Masons to which order he belonged.

—D. R. Farnham, of Rockford, says "W. S. King was in Washington, D. C. on that day and he did not speak at Greenwood on that day nor at any other time. So much for Catlin." Who said anything to the contrary? The speaker at Greenwood everybody but Farnham says was Rev. John. B. King a brother of W. S. and Dana E. King, and that Celebration in 1861.

County Cullings.

John H. Burt informs us that he is entirely out of politics.

The Eagle and Journal are already hair pulling over the coming Republican ticket.

The TRIBUNE accuses us of dropping exchanges. We have denied the charge and do so again.

The EAGLE seems determined to keep the name of Charley Hitz before the public as County Auditor if it keeps screeching it will doubtless ruin any chance he may have of obtaining that office.

Editor Willets, of the Annandale Post has evidently "come to stay" as he has had built for his use a snug little house in which he is to publish the paper and live, occupying the rooms in the second story as a residence.

It is locally hinted that Montrose in the opinion of some of her citizens is in want of a newspaper and that Delano would like to get rid of one.—Eagle, Is it possible that the Eagle thinks of changing her nest to that village?

This district of the M. E. Church will hold a campmeeting at Annandale commencing June 22nd. They have fine grounds adjoining the village and near the lake. Those desiring a week's outing will find this a splendid opportunity.

On Tuesday ye Editor took a trip over the "Soo" line as far as Anandale. This is a nice little village and is growing rapiely, many new buildings are under construction and everything looks favorable for the near time when Anandale will take rank among the foremost villages of Wright County.

On visiting Maple Lake this week we found a thriving place. Machine men were on hand entertaining farmers with their best stories. Merchants and others were busy. A new public school house is to be built this summer and we were glad to learn, (this being our first trip to that part of the country) that there are other places in our county than those along the G. N. Railway.

ST PETER HERALD: If anyone concludes that the democratic party or press will let up on the tariff then they reckon without their host. That party believes that tariff is a tax. It believes that imposed thereby is unequal, unjust and not akin to the best interests of the people. And believing that, it will continue to denounce it until it is wiped away and something put in its place which will not benefit one class at the expense of another.

Wholesale Denial.

MR. EDITOR GAZETTE.—This week the Tribune does not appear to touch the original question so there is nothing for us to say on that score.

We are glad the Tribune gives us credit for honesty of opinion when we say it has flown the track, etc., for the truth is, we never knew any better than to read things as they are written.

In this issue in one paragraph our friend denies the terms "bigot, hot-headed partisan," etc., and in the very next he says, (after quoting again from our last week's letter), "in the above quotation Mr. Davies exaggerates again." How could we quote it if he did not say it? How's that for logic and truth? Again in this last paragraph mentioned the Tribune says, "In the above quotation Mr. Davies exaggerates." Now the fact is we simply asked the man what he meant when he spoke of defending acts of bigotry, etc. Now what exaggeration can there be in asking a man why he said a certain thing is another mystery. The man who can use such logic is a promising candidate for some imbecile home.

If we are sossilly and narrow in our views it seems strange that such educators as Martin and others should teach those things. But no doubt the editor of the Tribune is advanced beyond these men.

ODE TO THE BELL.

[In memory of Mrs. L. P. Probst.]

Sad was thy song, oh beloved bell,
Ringing thy voice on the sweet May air;
Tolling, softly tolling her sad death knell,
Heaven had kissed her brow so fair;
Fluttering of the unseen had left its trace,
A sheen of beauty from the land of light
Had fallen in peace on the beautiful face,
And the angels of Heaven looked with delight.

Ring on, ring ever, oh beloved bell,
Ring out thy song twixt earth and the blue
Ring out thy sad song earth's last farewell,
Ring thy wedding bells loving and true,
Ring out thy truth for church and our God,
Ring thy songs of good will o'er city and dell,
Ring and the sweet flowers shall cover her sod,
Aye thou canst ne'er ring a sadder farewell.

RUTH.

Card of Thanks.

It is with the profoundest sense of gratitude that I take this means of thanking all those who by their acts of kindness and sympathy rendered such valuable services during the illness and at the funeral of my late beloved wife.

L. P. PROBST.

DELANO, June 1, 1892.

Political Points.

I make you another weekly visit through the medium of this paper, not as the vanguard of an approaching enemy but to have a short talk with you upon the signs of the times and the living issues of the day. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning."

In our political degeneracy we have forgotten and lost sight of our revolutionary fathers. They have called to us from the plains of Camden, Bunker Hill, Lexington and Concord. Yet we heed them not. We have gone into by and forbidden paths. The purity of the ballot and the sacredness of the constitution has become a thing of the past and our nation is in a state of perplexity and intoxication. We look to our leaders for redress but without avail. The money managers, the wine bibbers and the tax gatherers is the element that controls our politics today and their influence usurps authority over our legislation, both State and National while the common people of the country are becoming mere serfs. They have imposed upon them burdens grevious and hard to bear. Shoddy clothing, adulterated food, unjust taxes and iron clad mortgage upon their homesteads.

The saloon politicians discusses with his follows the condition of things both State and National and finally in their summing up come to the conclusion that every thing is all right so long as you can buy beer for five cents a glass but these are not Democratic principles as laid down by our forefathers more than a century ago. First, what are the burdens and grievances of the poor laboring man of today? Would say that the laborer and producer of this country have no control over their own capital. The man who works for wages his labor is his capital. As a rule his employer sets the price of his wages and pays him at will. The producer of the raw material in this country puts the products upon the markets and it goes up and down as the case may be by the grain and produce gamblers of New York, Chicago and other large railroad and seaport towns. The apostle of the high protective tariff puts a duty on imported goods coming into this country just high enough to keep them out. Then the manufacturers of this country combine or form a trust and raise their prices and the consumer has it to pay. We might go on and enumerate a great many of these combines but will only mention a few. The table glass ware trust, the oatmeal trust, the rubber trust, etc., and yet they claim the high protective tariff is to help the consumer and the laboring class. And again the money manager and some of the chief politicians are making the poor people of this country believe that silver is a spurious and debased coin. Would say to them allow yourselves no longer to be deceived. It is a trap. It is for their aggrandizment only and not for your benefit. In 1873 Congress passed a law demonetizing silver thereby destroying a coinage system which had been continuously in use for eighty three years. What is it that makes a dollar a legal tender? The stamp of the government. One Congress says a silver dollar is legal tender for all debts public and private provided it has the stamp of the Government affixed thereon. The next Congress demonitizes it and says it is a spurious coin worth only about 66 or 70 cents. With such legislation can the people expect a sure monetary system in this country? We answer no never. This great cry about silver being no good is brought about by the money sharks and bankers regardless of their political affiliation they are only trying to deceive you. Is their love for you so great? No, if you can not by any other means polish up your thinking faculties with an emery stone and look a little into the future.

It has become a custom in this country to call everybody a crank who does not follow in the wake of the majority. For instance the Democratic crank and the Prohibition crank etc., but I am glad to say though I may be only a little above the level of the bristle quadruped I do not drink swill out of every bodys pig trough.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

Temperance.

When a man drinks whiskey to make him forget his trouble, we will admit that it has the desired effect, but it makes him forget his family at the same time, and make a show of himself too. It makes him forget his responsibility to them, as a husband and father, it causes him to show to the world what was covered up in his nature by deceit. For when he is drunk he shows out just what was in him before he got drunk. When you find a man that is mean and unruly when he is drunk, you can be sure that it was in him before he got drunk and was uncovered by the effect of the drink. He forgets all his finest sensibilities, and shows out all the brute there is in him. Yon often see a drunk unruly man, and will hear some one say "oh! what a pity that he drinks, for when he is sober he is one of the finest of men." But only stop and reflect one moment. If that man was such a fine man, where did all that meanness come from? Most assuredly it was in him, and was only let loose by drink, and the evil that was in him before he drank. There is no excuse for any man to drink, but just as long as men that are a little addicted to drink, will make it a practice to go where they keep it, it is harder for them to keep from it. Not only this, but they should not keep company with those who drink, for drink is kept by the society of such men as well as the saloon's. How great are the responsibilities that we owe to society and our families in this matter? Can we set the example of a drunkard before our wives, our children or society, and be guiltless when the time comes for us to stand before the judgment bar of the great day when our works will be tried, to find out of what sort it is? We are not of the class that go to and fro through the world with the cry of whiskey, whiskey, and lay all the blame to whiskey, for it it not any more to blame than any other poisonous drug. Man only man is to be blamed. Whiskey never entered a mans body, nor confused his brain voluntarily nor by force but it was man that was all to blaime, he delights in it; some for one reason, some for another. But our reason is, that the man in the first place had no higher aspirations, and was possessed of a desire to in some way show out a little of his nature, and made himself an apetite for it, and finally became joined to his idols. We lay the fault at the very door of the individual himself, not to the tender, (anymore than that is not one of the highest callings.) Let it alone is all that should be said, and the manufacture will decrease as the call for it becomes less.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

Tariff is a Tax.
Grover Cleveland says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
Thomas Wilson says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

THE greatest event ever occuring in our state is now taking place at Minneapolis. It is the nominating by the republican party of a candidate for President of the United States. Harrison was supposed by most Western Republicans since Blaine's letter declining to be a candidate, to be the proper man to succeed himself, and, consequently, were severely shocked and chagrined when three days before the nominating convention the daily papers announced to the world that James G. Blaine, Secretary of State had resigned from the cabinet and his resignation had been accepted in as curt a manner as it was sent. This appeared to be a strong bid for the nomination for president by one who was by many thought to be friendly to the present administration. On Tuesday the delegates came together at the exposition building representing every State and territory in the union to the number of 900. J. Sloat Fassett, New Yorks defeated candidated for Governor was chosen temporary chrirman the committee on crenentials was selected with a majority for Blaine. The second day's proceedings resulted in the selection of William McKinley of Ohio, as permanent chairman. This looks as if the convention favored protection and after the platform is addopted it may be that McKinley will be found the most in accord with it and carry of the nomination in which case, with Grover Cleveland for an opponent, the fight would be strictly on the tariff question and doubtless prove interesting.

Tariff Pictures.

The free traders have been wasting a great deal of sympathy on the poor Western farmer. The poor Western farmer is getting along very well under the tariff and doesn't want their pity. Iowa may be taken as a typical farming Western state. From 1873 to 1890 the population of Iowa increased 60 per cent.

During the same period the bank deposits of the State increased 450 per cents.

And the Press might have further stated that Iowa now has a Democratic Governor, serving his second term.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, June 3, 1892.

The Blaine-Harrison rumpus has reached a stage dangerous alike to both of them, and many of the prominent republicans who have left here for Minneapolis within the last 48 hours have expressed themselves as opposed to nominating either Blaine or Harrison. Secretary Foster is much chagrined at the bomerang effect of the "nigger" document, signed by Fred Douglass, Auditor Lynch, Register Bruce, and Congressman Chaetam, which was sent out at his suggestion through one of the press associations early this week for the purpose of injuring Blaine. It is, according to information received here, hurting Harrison more than Blaine. It is among the probabilities that the Grant-Blaine fight may be duplicated at Minneapolis and a dark horse capture the nomination.

The Harrison men are making desperate efforts to get Blaine to announce that he will not accept if nominated, and as an inducement, it is said that Mr. Harrison has offered to nominate his son-in-law, Col. Coppinger, to the vacancy made by the retirement of Brigadier General David S. Stanley, a few days ago. Mr. Blaine has been very anxious to get Col. Coppinger promoted, and one of the reasons for his late coolness towards Mr. Harrison was his failure to secure the last vacancy for him, but he is in the sulks now and the offer may have no effect.

Senator Shermans' two-day speech against the freecoinage bill, which the Senate has agreed not to vote upon until after the 14th inst., was an able presentation of the financial question from his point of view, but it will change no votes; indeed, the silver men claim to have made two recruits Senators Hill, and Hunton, of Virginia, on the day it was finished.

The republicans of the House sat like deaf mutes when Representative Moses challenged them to show the benefit received by the farmer under the McKinley tariff law, and offered to vote the republican ticket for the rest of his life if any one could show him that the McKinley act benefited the man who raised a bale of cotton or a bushel of wheat. There was one exception among the republicans Mr. Bergen, of New Jersey but as soon as he opened his mouth he put his foot in it, and that was the last of him. Impossible tasks are not alluring to republicans or others.

Senator Turpie paid his respects to the administration, yesterday, in a speech criticising the action of the President in issuing retaliatory proclamations against Hayti, Colombia, and Venezuela because of their failure to make reciprocity agreements with us.

The House has again run upon the "no quorum" snag, and a resolution revoking all leaves of absence except on account of sickness was adopted early in the week and the Sergeant-at-Arms has run up a big bill telegraphing to absentees. In spite of all this it is not beleived that it will be possible to keep a quorum together for two days at a time during the remainder of this month. The cause is evident. This is national convention month. At least half of the republican members of the House are now at Minneapolis, or on their way their, and when they return, which will not be much before the middle of the month, about the same percentage of democrats will go to Chicago, remaining away from Washington at least a week. Congressmen are only human, and it is perfectly natural that they should desire to aid in the selection of the national ticket of their party.

A notable feature of the exodus of the Republican Senators and Representatives to Minneapolis is the large number of private cars which have been placed at their disposal by the owners. This shows, as nothing else can, how close the republican party is to the big corporations of the country. It costs money, and lots of it, to maintain and run a private parlor, and the railroad magnates are not doing it for fun they expect to be amply repaid for all favors shown to these republican Congressmen.

Mr. Cleveland's friends in Congress say there is no good reason to suppose that the Syracuse contestants will hurt or help anybody's candidacy at Chicago while Senator Hill's friends content that the Syracuse convention made bolters of Mr. Cleveland's friends in that State, and that he is now out of the question as the nominee.

Commissioner Raum's latest attempt at vindication was to submit a long statement to the committee concerning that $12.000. note which Lemon, the pension attorney, endorsed for him, and his administration of the office. The committee declined to admit the statement as evidence until the members had an opportunity to carefully examine it.

There was a rumor this week that Mr. Blaine had resigned and that his resignation had been refused by Mr. Harrison, after a stormy scene.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Crow River Valley.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

ORONO—1856.

During the year 1856, several parties attempted to raft logs from the shores of Lake Minnetonka across that body of water and through its outlet to the saw mill and furniture factory of Stevens, Tuttle, Webster and others erected on, and driven by the water collected in the dam built across the outlet at Minnetonka City. While some of these parties succeeded in bringing logs to Minnetonka City others failed in the attempt and the experiment in a general way not proving to be a success was abandoned. The logs were collected on the shores and on the ice during the previous winter, and those logs which wer still in their unseasoned state sank upon the thawing of the ice. Only those that had become seasoned to some extent could be rafted. Some of the parties engaged in this enterprise were William and Samuel French, Isaac A. Christlieb, Miles Bayer and Rev. Abraham Gress (Independence) the latter being one of the parties whose logs sank upon the thawing of the ice.

His son Wm Gress was then holding a claim in Orono.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The influx of immigration which assumed immense proportions in 1855 continued with unabated vigor during the few years following, accompanying it was an abundance of money. Towns and cities with accompanying business enterprizes were begun in the newly populated forests. Some of these enterprises were begun and carried forward not only in good faith but with much anticipation of success while others were inaugurated merely as money making schemes in the way of selling city lots at fabulous prices, under fraudulent practices and misrepresentations, the latter affecting parties who had come to the country with the idea of buying real estate as an investment, more than it did the actual settler of the vicinity.

At most of these townsites stores and steam saw-mills were brought in and put into operation, accompanied perhaps by some tradesmen as blacksmiths, or shoemakers, and these enterprises, with those of some settlers who came with abundant means, and with the idea of clearing up a farm in a very short time, afforded considerable employment to the settlers of the vicinity, at a fair compensation, which was of material aid to the latter in supporting themselves, their clearings not having become of sufficient proportions to accommodate that purpose: and it may be further stated that many of the settlers during the winter season found employment with lumbermen of St. Anthony's falls and Minneapolis in their operations in the pineries on the Rum and Mississippi rivers.

By mid-summer 1856 extensive settlements were made in that portion of the big woods lying in the western part of Hennepin Co., and on Crow River, and clearings of considerable size surrounded the dwellings of the settlers, which were set with a healthy growth of various kinds of agricultural products, and each settler inspired with the thought that the privations and hard labor borne and performed on the part of himself and household, in chopping down, rolling together and burning heavy timber and making his home at that place had not been fruitless was looking forward not only hopefully but with much pleasure at the idea of having once raised much toward if not sufficient, from his land, to feed man and beast living thereon during the coming winter accompanied by the encouraging prospect that in the future he should have plenty of good vegetables, meat, bread, &c.; so that all would not have to be purchased as heretofore from means brought with him and from his earnings and thereby saving something to enable him to make further improvements and increase his live stock and obtain many conveniences of life.

Those prospects were not to be realized just yet however. The settlers had not then learned much of the adverse conditions to which the country was subject. The unusual calamaties and untoward circumstances which seem to attend the first settlement of all new countries, had not yet intervened

All that seemed to be to any degree discouraging to them were the myriads of mosquitoes and cold winters.

From this happy dream of prosperity they were suddenly awakened by the grasshopper raid of August 19, 1856. During the eve following that smiling Minnesota morn myriads of those insects passed over the country in clouds from the north west, obscuring the light of the sun, and swooped down in great masses upon the growing crops in the small openings of the great forest and commenced devouring corn, potato stocks, garden vegetation and trimming the green leaves of small grains and trees so that by the setting of the sun, many of those luxurient spots had become barren wastes on which nothing more was to be seen except masses of the destroyers several inches deep, on the ground and about stumps attempting, it seemed, to devour the latter in their madness. Vegetation that escaped the first days devastation was destroyed in the few days following. Some small grain that was too ripe, as rye, and Rio Grande wheat on account of its beards escaped. Of small grain however very little was sown up to that time, in the region lying immediately north of Lake Minnetonka. The tobacco crop of the German settlers did not even escape destruction, which in some instances, at least, proved to be too much for the constitution of the grasshopper. Many of the insects were found dead about tobacco patches. During the few days following it was discovered that the grasshoppers were laying eggs and the prospect of having another plague, during the next spring at the planting time was a matter of much dire apprehehsion, so with what had just taken place the immediate future was not very bright for the settler.

Although the crops were destroyed the settlers were not left without resources. The grasshopper raid did not affect financial matters in Minnesota. Immigration and money still continued to flow in, so that the opportunities for employment at ample compensation continued, and the settler during the winter of 1856-7 managed to maintain himself by the methods pursued the previous winters, namely by his labor and from other resources under his control, so that the winter was passed suffering more from apprehension of future injury from the grasshoppers than from actual want, for the latter was not perhaps much different from what it had been previous winters.

THE will of ex-President James K. Polk, which bequeathed his estate to his widow, and after her death to that member of the family who should be pronounced the worthiest relative bearing the name of Polk, has finally been declared null and void by the courts of Tennessee, and the property, amounting to about $300,000, goes to the heirs at law, without any reference to their worthiness.

STILL another African traveler, Capt. Binger, has gone through the savage regions of the west coast of the Niger without an escort and in safety. This Frenchman says that the natives were everywhere peaceably inclined toward him, and he was surprised at their honesty. At one place he found five or six sheds filled with merchandise and nobody was needed to guard them, as there were no thieves among the people.

GEN. BOOTH announces a great need of funds to carry on the Salvation Army. He recalls his announcement that the $500,000 given for his "Darkest England" scheme would require $150,000 annually for maintenance, as only $20,000 of that had been furnished so far. So the scheme is also at a standstill. The "spiritual" fund is also exhausted. To carry on the "spiritual side of the war" into the self-denial week in October will require $40,000, and the money is needed immediately.

MRS. BEECHER says that her husband used to prepare the bulk of his sermon Sunday morning after breakfast. But it was never certain that he would use this material. Frequently after the services had begun, the prayer been delivered, the Scriptures read and the choir was half through the hymn, Mr. Beecher would be struck by an idea, and jotting it down on a scrap of paper or the back of a letter taken from his coat pocket, he would preach extemporaneously one of the best of sermons.

THE colored race does not increase rapidly in New England. Rhode Island is the only one of the New England states where the colored people were, in 1890, over 2 per cent. of the population. The proportion of negroes has, according to the census, fallen off from 2.49 per cent. of the population of 1850 to 2.21 per cent. in 1890. The census enumerators found 23,570 colored people in Massachusetts in 1890, 1,723 in Maine, 690 in New Hampshire, 1,004 in Vermont, 7,647 in Rhode Island and 12,820 in Connecticut.

THE historic old locomotive, "The General," famous as the engine stolen by union soldiers at Big Shanty, on the Western & Atlantic road, is to be a part of Georgia's exhibit at the world's fair. The locomotive is now being overhauled and repainted, as it has been badly used up of recent years in its humble service as a switch engine. The chase after the federal soldiers who ran away with "The General," their subsequent capture and execution form one of the most exciting episodes of war times.

A VERY singular way to travel was that of the recently wedded wife of John Alcock, a farmer living near McFall Station, Mo. John, who is awkward in appearance as well as eccentric and penurious, conceived the brilliant plan of boxing up Mrs. John and loading her in the car with his other goods and chattels, thereby saving her fare. At one of the stations he unboxed her and she traveled comfortably until nearer their destination. She was then replaced in the box and arrived at Rocky Ford none the worse for the journey.

THOUGH Longfellow wrote a very beautiful poem about the Bermudas he never visited those islands. Not long before his death he was called upon by the Misses Trimmingham, who were among the wealthiest people of Bermuda. They sought him out in his Cambridge home, and though at that time he denied himself to most callers the poet welcomed the ladies quite cordially. As he conducted them to the door at the end of a pleasant chat he paused in saying good-by and said, as if in reverie: "Bermuda, Bermuda, how I have longed to go there, but now I never shall!"

PROF. H. C. ADAMS, the statistician of the interstate commerce commission, makes the statement that out of 153,235 trainmen in this country, 1,459 were killed and 13,172 were injured last year. Of these accidents 37.94 per cent. of the deaths and 45.57 per cent. of the injuries were sustained by railway employes while coupling cars or setting brakes. Prof. Adams says further that out of a total of 1,105,042 cars in the freight service there are but 87,390 fitted with the automatic couplers, and but 100,990 equipped with train brakes. It would seem that man is cheaper than brakes.

THE societies of Friends, better known by some people as "Quakers," are associating for a full representation of their organization in the congress of religions to be held in connection with the world's fair. They have appointed a special committee of ten, who have selected a list of names of many Friends residing in England, Canada and the United States to constitute an advisory council. The specified duty of these persons is to prepare a concise history in non-sectarian spirit of the origin, growth and labors of the society, with a statement of its faith and testimonies and the effect of its work.

LATER NEWS.

IN the United States senate on the 6th a bill was reported to facilitate the enforcement of the present immigration and contract labor laws. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was also reported. In the house bills were passed to admit New Mexico and Arizona to statehood; appropriating $50,000 for a pedestal for a monument to Gen. W. T. Sherman; the legislative appropriation bill and Mr. Hatch's anti-option bill. A concurrent resolution for the final adjournment of congress on Monday, July 4, at 2 o'clock, was referred.

FURTHER advices state that by the catastrophe in the oil regions of Pennsylvania over 200 persons were burned to death or drowned and two or three millions of property were consumed in Oil City and Titusville, besides great damage to property in other localities near by owing to inundation. The total property loss will reach probably about $5,000,000. Thousands have lost their homes and large manufacturing interests have been wiped out. Sixty-seven bodies have thus far been recovered at Oil City and fifty-six at Titusville. Eighteen miles of death and desolation is the story in brief.

REPUBLICANS MEET

THE CONVENTION OPENS.

The Tenth Quadrennial Republican Convention Opens at Minneapolis.—Proceedings of the First Day.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 8.—When the clock showed 12:30 yesterday Chairman J. S. Clarkson brought the gavel down twice, sharply, the convention and the galleries came to order quickly, and there was not a delegate standing when Mr. Clarkson announced that the session would be opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Brush, chancellor of the University of South Dakota.

J. SLOAT FASSETT.

At the close of the prayer, M. H. De. Young of California, stepped forward and read the call for the convention. At this time there was not a dozen of the delegates seats unfilled, but the galleries were very empty.

At 12:39 the reading of the call was concluded, and Chairman Clarkson arose and announced that he was instructed by the committee to present to the convention, for its temporary chairman, Hon. J. Resolved that the roll of states and territories be called, and that the chairman of each delegation announce the names of the persons selected to serve on the committees as follows: Permanent organization, rules and order of business, credentials and resolutions.

The resolution was adopted and the roll call of states began.

As soon as the call was finished the convention adjourned until 11 a. m. today.

At a meeting of the committee on permanent organization, Gov. McKinley of Ohio was selected as permanent chairman.

ILLUSTRIOUS AMERICANS.

GEN. HORACE PORTER in a single month swelled the Grant monument fund by $200,000.

CHARLES A. DANA recently returned this answer to a dinner invitation, writing it on the back of the request: "Why, of course."

AMONG the most prominent victims of the grim reaper is John Lyle King, said to be one of the best trial lawyers of Chicago's bar. He was sixty-seven years of age.

INSPECTOR STEERS, New York's new chief of detectives, vice Byrnes, promoted, has been on the force since 1857. One year he rescued thirteen people from drowning.

"UNCLE JERRY" RUSK, secretary of agriculture, never misses a game of baseball that comes his way. He was one of the best players in Wisconsin in his day, and isn't above mounting an umpire now if a decision that he considers unfair is rendered.

THE last surviving "hero of Harper's Ferry," Richard W. Howard, who was with John Brown in his descent on and capture of the United States arsenal at that place, is living in retirement in the Rhode Island town of Warwick, where he was for years a manufacturer of woolen yarns.

PENNSYLVANIA'S WOE.

Further Details of the Awful Disasters at Oil City and Titusville—The Number of Dead Nearly 300.

OIL CITY, Pa., June 7.—As each hour passes horrors add to horrors. Not only were the first reports of Sunday's disaster not exaggerated, they were not large enough. Constant additions are being made to the death list. Eighty-seven are now accounted for and the search is not half finished. Mayor Hunt estimates the death loss in Oil City alone at 150, but these figures bid fair to be too small.

There were between 250 and 300 houses destroyed, besides the various hotels, works and manufactories. While the financial loss is hard to estimate at this time it is certain to reach $1,250,000, or even go beyond that figure.

Over 300 homeless people are being taken care of, and the Presbyterian church is being used as a temporary house. Heartrending and pitiful sights meet one everywhere and tales of heroism and desperate fights with the two destroying elements are heard.

At a late hour sixty-seven bodies had been taken from the ruins. Those who are acquainted with the locality where the greatest damage was done say the loss of life must reach at least 150, and many put the figures at 200. The number of bodies recovered gives no fair estimate of the number lost.

Unbounded gratitude is felt and expressed by the relief committee here over the unsolicited and generous subscriptions and offers of aid from outside persons. The committee has in hand over $12,000, and the answers to inquiries received will swell the subscriptions to double this sum. Already there have been requests for aid from 300, and this number is slowly being swelled. This by no means represents the total number of suffers, as many of them have friends here who have provided for them. Among the cities which have either sent subscriptions or made inquiries relative thereto are Pittsburgh, New York, Toronto, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Rochester, Jamestown, Syracuse, Albany, Harrisburg, Altoona, Erie, Cleveland, Columbus, Sandusky, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Louis, St Paul, San Francisco, Denver, Baltimore, Washington.

One of the heroes who gave his life for that of others was William L. Stewart, of Siverlyville, a small village about a mile up Oil creek. When the disaster occurred Stewart ran to his home in Siverlyville and dragged a boat to the water's edge. He braved the death that moved on the waters, and was one of those who helped to save the west side victims. For an hour he helped to drag people out of the houses on the bank of Oil creek, and bore them in his boat to safety. A great wave of naphtha approached over Stewart's head, a house cracked and in an instant he was engulfed in a mass of mortar and flame. He died at his post almost in the very act of snatching lives from the aging elements. His body was fearfully battered and burned. He leaves a wife and two children.

John O'Leary, whose life and his mother's were blotted out, had just assumed the position made vacant by the death of Messenger Metz, who was killed in the railroad disaster at Foster a few days ago. When the flood and fire struck the O'Leary home John tried to save his mother, who was almost 80 years of age, but, failing, he calmly sat down by her side and mother and son faced death together.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 7.—People are just beginning to realize the extent of the awful calamity wrought by fire and flood upon this city. The scene of desolation is terrible. Soon after daylight appeared the sight of men carrying dead bodies through the streets on stretchers became so common as to occasion no surprise. At the present writing it is estimated that fully 250 persons have been either drowned or burned to death. The money loss will run from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. An idea of the amount of territory covered by the flood and fire can be obtained when it is stated that over 2 miles of property were destroyed. This includes railroads, factories, refineries, and private dwellings, etc.

A total of fifty-five bodies had been recovered up to 10:30 o'clock p. m. The work of searching for the dead is still being prosecuted with the utmost vigor, as the weather is beginning to grow warm and the odor of the charred remains of human flesh and animals is beginning to pollute the air.

ERIE, Pa., June 7.—Sunday evening Clark's milldam at Union City burst and a wall of water swept through the town, carrying thirty houses from their foundations, and, while many persons were hurt, none lost their lives. Hundreds of horses and cattle were drowned. The damage will reach not less than $100,000. The towns of Garland, Pittsfield, Columbus and many other places are under water.

Oil City was incorporated as a borough in 1862, and as a city in 1870. It has thirteen churches, three public schools, six banks, two oil refineries, a manufactory of engines, of engine boilers, a barrel factory and other industries.

Titusville is on Oil creek and on the Allegheny Valley railroad and is the terminus of the Dunkirk & Allegheny Valley and Union & Titusville railroads. It is 90 miles south of Dunkirk and about 25 miles east of Meadville. It is the most populous town of Crawford county. It has nine churches, several banks, an opera house and a high school, hotels, printing offices and newspapers. Titusville has several oil wells, oil refineries, steam sawmills, large iron works, which produce engines, boiler tubes and other machinery, and manufactories of barrels, wagons and of tools for working oil wells.

Great Damage at Meadville.

MEADVILLE, Pa., June 6.—This entire section was swept by the worst flood in its history Saturday night. A midday rain of great volume swelled every stream bankful and the storm which followed in the evening brought the flood. In this city Mill run overflowed its banks and swept the whole business portion of the city, demolishing a dozen or more buildings and entailing a total loss of $150,000. The loss throughout the country cannot be estimated. Bridges were washed away in every direction, leaving scarcely a passible road in the county. The damage to growing crops is heavy.

Drowned in a Dakota Flood.

HURON, S. D., June 7.—A cloudburst Sunday afternoon between Harold and Blunt flooded a large section of the country, doing great damage to crops and washing out a stretch of the Northwestern railroad track. Mrs. K. M. Foote and three children, while returning from a neighbor's, were drowned in attempting to cross a ravine with a team.

Two Thousand People Homeless.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 7.—A fire in the town of Kovno has destroyed 300 houses, depriving 2,000 persons of their homes.

PASSED THE HOUSE.

A Busy Day in the Lower Branch of Congress—The Hatch Anti-Option Bill and Measures Favoring the Admission of New Mexico and Arizona as States Are Passed.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—In the house Monday after a roll-call for a quorum Mr. Hatch (Mo.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the anti-option bill. A second having been ordered, Mr. Culberson (Tex.) asked unanimous consent that the debate be extended to two hours, but thirty minutes being allowed under the rules, and Mr. Blanchard objected. Mr. Hatch in support of the measure said it would put a stop to the practice of dealing in farm products not based on the ownership of property or on the rights derived from the owner to sell it for future delivery.

Mr. Rainer (Md.) protested against rushing a bill of this importance through under a suspension of rules. It was one of the most dangerous measures that had ever made its appearance in this body. It destroyed every conception of state sovereignty, and would, carried to its logical conclusion, break down the distinctions between the federal and state governments.

Mr. Castle (Minn.) thought the bill should be entitled "a bill to depress the value of all products raised by the farmers."

Mr. Patterson (Tenn.) regarded it as an abuse of the taxing power. Mr. Taylor (Ill.), Mr. Harter (O.) and Mr. Stout (Mich.) opposed the bill.

Mr. Henderson (Ia.) declared that this was a battle between the great money centers and the great mass of producers. This same conflict about the constitution had been fought over the oleomargarine bill and the question had been settled. The bill provided for revenue with incidental protection, and that was broad enough for all. Congress had stricken down the Louisiana lottery, whose victims were voluntary. Would it refuse to strike down the greater evil, whose victims were involuntary and who protested against the crime?

The motion was agreed to—yeas, 178; nays, 46—and accordingly the bill was passed.

The first two sections of the bill define "options" and "futures;" the third names, as the articles to which they shall relate, "cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, grass seed, flaxseed, pork and other edible products of swine," and the fourth imposes a license of $1,000 on dealers in options and futures and a tax of five cents on each pound of cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon and other edible products of swine, and twenty cents a bushel on each bushel of the other articles which are the subject of any "options" or "future" contract which such dealer or vender shall make, either in his own behalf or in behalf of others.

Mr. Bryan (Neb.) moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill appropriating $50,000 for a pedestal for a monument to Gen. W. T. Sherman. The bill passed—144 to 32.

Mr. Washington (Tenn.) moved a suspension of the rules and the passage of a bill admitting the territory of New Mexico into the sisterhood of states. Mr. Perkins (Ia.) demanded a second. The second having been ordered the bill was passed—167 to 3—amid loud applause. The applause was renewed when Mr. Smith (A. T.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill admitting Arizona to statehood. The bill was passed—yeas, 174; nays, 12.

Mr. McMillin (Tenn.) introduced a concurrent resolution for the final adjournment of congress on Monday, July 4, at 2 o'clock. Referred. The house then adjourned.

FOUR MEN INSTANTLY KILLED.

Kinzie & Cougill's Boiler Explodes—Serious Damage to Property Also.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., June 7.—The boiler in Kinzie & Cougill's tile works, 2½ miles south of Idaville, White county, exploded at 6:30 Monday morning, four men being killed. The dead are James Cougill, Bert Roller, David Taylor and George Williams. James Cougill's feet were burned off. George Williams had a piece of iron blown through his bowels, Davis Taylor's feet and head were blown off, and Bert Roller was smothered. A piece of the boiler was blown through Williams' house, near by. The damage to property is $5,000. Cougill and Taylor leave families. Roller and Williams were recently married. The cause of the explosion was turning water in an empty boiler after the fire had been started.

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Inspector Marsh, of the Chicago Police Force, Alleged to Have Been Engaged in Corrupt Practices.

CHICAGO, June 7.—Frederick H. Marsh has been relieved from his position as inspector of the Chicago police pending an investigation of the charge that he has been carrying favor with the gamblers. During his administration as superintendent of police under Mayor Cregier he negotiated a loan for $5,000, the note for which recently came into the hands of Mayor Washburne and bore the indorsement of a prominent gambler. Marsh admitted having given the note, but claimed he did not know of its being indorsed by the gambler. Marsh was a few years ago the United States marshal for the Northern district of Illinois.

RELICS OF THE RUSTLER WAR.

Four Bodies Swinging to the Limb of a Tree Found Near Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Wyo., June 7.—A party of cattlemen who were preparing for a round-up when the injunction was served upon them have returned to town and report the finding of a relic of the recent war between cattlemen and rustlers in the shape of four human bodies swinging to the limb of a tree. The bodies had evidently been hanging for several weeks and were dried and shriveled to such an extent that it was impossible to tell who they were. They were dressed in cowboy style.

Killed While Riding on a Hand Car.

YAQUINA CITY, Ore., June 7.—Sunday morning a passenger train on the Oregon Pacific ran into a hand car, on which were ten persons, including two women and five children. Mrs. Pratt and one child were killed. A child named Manning was also killed instantly. The seven others were severely injured.

Death of Daniel D. Moore.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Daniel D. Moore, once the editor and proprietor of the Rural New Yorker, died Friday night in the New York hospital, where he had been a patient for several weeks.

A VACANT CHAIR.

President Harrison Loses His Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, by Resignation.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Secretary Blaine has resigned the secretaryship of state and the resignation has been accepted by the president.

The terms in which the resignation is offered leaves no doubt as to its purpose. Mr. Blaine is now an avowed candidate for the nomination at Minneapolis as much as if he had announced himself as such in positive terms.

The news came to the capitol by telegraph and created great excitement, and a moment later when the report came that the president had accepted the resignation the excitement redoubled.

The correspondence between Mr. Blaine and the president follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, June 4, 1892.—To the President: I respectfully beg leave to submit my resignation of the office of secretary of state of the United States, to which I was appointed by you on the fifth of March, 1889.

"The condition of public business in the department of state justifies me in requesting that my resignation may be accepted immediately. I have the honor to be, very respectfully your obedient servant,

"JAMES G. BLAINE."

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 4, 1892.—To the Secretary of State: Your letter of this date tendering your resignation of the office of secretary of state of the United States has been received. The terms in which you state your desires are such as to leave me no choice but to accede to your wishes at once. Your resignation is therefore accepted.

"Very respectfully yours,

"BENJAMIN HARRISON.

"Hon. James G. Blaine."

It will be observed that these two notes are the briefest possible under the circumstances. No hint is given by the secretary as to the motives for his resignation, and the president's reply is distinctly cold and formal. They part as rivals for the greatest office within the gift of the people.

The president assigned William F. Wharton, first assistant secretary, to act as secretary of state until a new appointment can be made. Mr. Wharton has been in the department for three years and has acquired a thorough familiarity with the working details of the office.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 6.—The news that Secretary Blaine has resigned and that the resignation has been accepted by the president has caused the greatest excitement here. The Blaine men are wild with enthusiasm, and cheer after cheer greeted the announcement in the West hotel. Clarkson, Platt, Fassett and a score of other Blaine boomers insist that this means Blaine's nomination on the first ballot, and there really appears to be a Blaine stampede among the delegates and others.

The Harrison men do not give up the battle. They were paralyzed when they heard the news from Washington, but they scout all suggestions that their candidate will withdraw from the race.

CHURCH WRECKED.

A Cyclone Demolishes a House of Worship in McCook, Neb., and Many Persons Are Hurt.

MCCOOK, Neb., June 6.—A cyclone visited this city Saturday afternoon and during its brief stay did a vast amount of damage and caused many injuries. The most serious work it performed was the wrecking of the Congregational church, in which the little folks of the city were rehearsing for children's day. Those dangerously injured there were:

Rev. W. C. Stevenson, seriously injured on the head and hip; Ruth Creswell, bruised about the spine; May Creswell, leg and jaw broken; Danny McAlpine, bruised about the head and face; Harry Campbell, injured on the head and hip; Maud McMillan, shoulder injured; Mabel Berry, arm and leg injured.

Only two minutes before the cyclone struck the building about 200 of the smaller children had finished their exercises and gone home. The church was lifted from its foundation as lightly as if it were an eggshell and then crashed down a mass of ruins with a noise like the booming of cannon, burying about sixty children, the pastor and several teachers. The children who had first left the building ran screaming with terror to their homes. Many were hurt by flying timbers, but so far as known none seriously. In was thought that few would be got out alive, but the timbers in falling had formed an arch over the heads of those who were in the building and some were uninjured. None of the injured has died. Seven of the children are seriously injured.

TRAINS IN COLLISION.

Four Men Killed and Twenty-Six Colored Excursionists Injured.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., June 6.—News was received here of a terrible accident which occurred on the Owensboro & Nashville railway about 9 o'clock Sunday morning near South Carroll, Ky., in which four persons were killed and a number injured. A colored excursion train consisting of three coaches and a baggage car which left Owensboro, Ky., at 7:30 o'clock collided with the regular northbound passenger train. Twenty-six persons, mostly colored excursionists, sustained injuries. As near as could be learned the accident was caused by Engineer Fahey disobeying orders in going beyond Stroud station, where the excursion was to sidetrack for the passenger train. Both engines were completely demolished. The negroes of Owensboro are wild with excitement because of exaggerated reports of the number of the killed.

WASHED OVER THE DAM.

A Father and Two Sons Drowned in the Milwaukee River.

MILWAUKEE, June 6.—A farmer named Lowe, aged 45 years, and his two sons, aged 11 and 13 years, were drowned Saturday afternoon by being carried over Bender's milldam on the Milwaukee river about 6 miles north of the city. The three were fishing from a small boat which was caught in the current, but before assistance could reach it the boat went over the dam. For a moment the father with his two boys clinging to him was seen struggling for life, but he soon disappeared.

An Aged Couple Killed.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., June 6.—A frightful accident occurred on the Omaha and Council Bluffs Bridge & Motor Company's line here Sunday evening at 5 o'clock. An eastbound train on the line was crossing the bridge when the trailer jumped the track at the west end of the main span, striking the side of the bridge and pitching an aged couple out, killing them both. They were Charles Cole and wife, of Omaha. Several others were injured and the trailer wrecked. The motorer and conductor were arrested.

MA BELLE.

That was a withered wreath, ma belle,
I saw upon your grave to-day,
It had been long, one well could tell,
Since he had knelt by you to pray.
Yet sorely did he weep that morn
When your sweet soul in Heaven was born,
And sorely moan when, both at rest,
Your babe was laid upon your breast.

If death, whose shaft is sure, ma belle,
Had struck at him instead of you,
Would time have rung your sorrow's knell
Before the trees could bud anew?
Would we have found upon his tomb
Those sorry skeletons of bloom?
Twining like dismal ghosts the leaf
Whereon is writ a faded grief.

I wondered as I looked, ma belle,
How it had fared if I had won;
Would I have mourned so brief a spell—
A week, a month, and then had done?
When you had looked your last, and passed
With noiseless step into the vast,
Would I have hastened to forget,
Or loved you—as I do, dear, yet?

A LOVE TEST.

Why Arthur Remained Steadfast in Adversity.

Arthur Ferris was tall, blonde, handsome, and twenty-eight. He was also the possessor of a long head, inherited from the maternal side of the house. He was likewise a dutiful son.

It was the two latter circumstances that had, on more than one occasion, saved him from making a triumphant ass of himself. Just fancy! If it had not been for his long head, it is more than likely that he would have fallen desperately in love with that bewitching governess of the Hastings, with whom he had spent several weeks in the mountains one summer five years ago. But he had given himself time to think, and had fled between two days, much to his later satisfaction.

Then there was that dear little Miss Dixon, whom he had met at the seaside. It had been a glorious evening—that last. They were sitting on the veranda, where they might see and yet be unseen. The soft, dreamy strains of a Strauss waltz floated out from the ball room. There was the pale, silver light of the moon, the murmuring ripple of the waves on the beach—and all that sort of thing, which you have read about so many times that you have learned to skip it in the novels.

Well! Elsie was going away—too, too soon. They had talked in sighs and murmurs for half an hour; Arthur's left hand clasped Elsie's dimpled right one, his right arm was about her waist; both hearts beat vigorously, as hearts will on such occasions, and Arthur had just opened his mouth to tell Elsie what she had been waiting for for two weeks, when there was a step close at hand, a rustle of skirts, and the cooing voice of the maternal Ferris said:

"I beg your pardon, but will you please excuse Arthur a few moments? There are those miserable business affairs that must be attended to in time for the late mail."

And thus was he saved a second time. For Elsie had not a cent, and neither had he—at least, not many of them. There were several other occasions when his own long head, or his mamma's, had helped him out—for Arthur was somewhat susceptible. But it is not of these I have to tell.

His time had come. The in-every-way-desirable young person had presented herself. True, she was not so young as she had been; but, then, that was a mere trifle. She was just his own age, of as good a family as his own, and an heiress of considerable degree. She was not—well, not exactly handsome, and was rather inclined to what is politely called plumpness; but Arthur's mamma and Arthur's long head give their approval—and Arthur did not care who she might be, so long as she possessed the above qualifications, particularly the one involving a very neat fortune in her own right.

Besides, Arthur was getting a bit desperate. In fact, he had so far exceeded his own salary and the maternal allowance (which, by the way, was as large as Mrs. Ferris could afford) that nothing short of a miracle, or a matrimonial alliance, such as he had been so long seeking, could save him from getting into very deep water.

And thus it came to pass that this winter found him engaged to Miss Bernice Field, much to the satisfaction of his mother, who was visiting in New York, and to whom he had, like the dutiful son he was, sent the gratifying news at once.

He was disappointed, however, on one point. He had pleaded artfully for an early wedding, but Miss Field had set her foot down with much firmness and said he must go through a long probationary period—all of which Arthur failed to understand. He had always been noted for his persuasive powers, and had flattered himself that Bernice, with her gentle, clinging, bud-like ways, would succumb at once.

Now, be it known that Miss Bernice Field had not arrived at years of discretion for nothing. Neither had she, a not unprepossessing young person, with nearly a half-million in her own right, passed through the experiences of ten seasons without gathering unto herself much knowledge of the ways and wiles of wicked man. She had had as might have been expected, offers to a high number; but, thus far, the gentlemen concerned had failed—by reason of their unanimous desire to touch her purse—to touch, in the first place, the all-important key to it, which was hidden away in her plump bosom. And Miss Bernice Field was worldly-wise in her day and generation.

She was certainly in love with Ferris—there could be no doubt of that. It is quite as certain that she was very seriously in love with him; but, with the wisdom born of experience, she did not let him know one-half of what she felt for him.

If anyone had told Ferris that he was just now in a very shaky position, he would have scoffed. His chum, Ed Cross, who was spending the winter at the house during Mrs. Ferris' absence, had once suggested that "there's many a slip," but Arthur merely shied a shoe at him, and whistled serenely.

It was in this frame of mind that, one evening in February, he ran lightly up the steps of the Field mansion to call on her whom Cross unfeelingly referred to as his "little lady love." It was warm, and the front door stood ajar. The little footman was not in his accustomed place, so Ferris, with the air of one who knew just where he was going, stepped inside. From the open door of Papa Field's study came the sound of voices in earnest discussion, and one of them spoke his own name.

He halted, irresolute, as would any one else under like circumstances. Papa Field was speaking:

"Of course, my dear, you are your own mistress, and I can only advise you. It seems to me, however, that you have done a very foolish thing to engage yourself to this young Ferris. True, he seems an exemplary young fellow, and he comes of an excellent family; but it is well known that he has only a small allowance from the estate in addition to a beggarly two thousand dollars' salary. How do you know that it is you and not your money that he wants? It is a brutal question, I know, but it is one you have probably asked of yourself a half-dozen times, concerning other young men."

Arthur, out in the hall, standing in much the same attitude a child assumes when speaking its first "piece" in school, winced, but waited for the answer. It came, in serious, thoughtful tones, which plainly indicated that Miss Bernice, also, had considered this very matter:

"N-no, I am sure you misjudge him, papa. Of course I understand how he is situated financially, and—and all that. But I am sure he is honest and honorable, and that he—he cares for me very much. There are a thousand ways by which I can learn much that you cannot, and—"

"Yes, yes; I understand. But suppose you should put him to the test; do you think he would come through—ah—er—unscathed, as it were? Suppose you should tell him that I had lost all your money and mine in unfortunate speculation—that we were beggars, and had not a dollar we could call our own? Are you afraid to try him?"

There was a brief silence. Then:

"I don't like to tell a falsehood, papa; but it would be only a 'white lie,' and perhaps for the best. Yes, I'll try him to-morrow night."

"That's my dutiful girl. Now run along and let me work."

There was a sound of a kiss, and the perspiring young man in the hall hastened to get out of the house. He wanted time to think, but the first thing that entered his head, as he reached the sidewalk, was a fanciful picture of the petite Miss Field, with her one hundred and sixty pounds of avoirdupois, "running along," and he smiled broadly. Then he walked rapidly over to the next street to catch a cab to his club, there to hold a pow-wow with Cross.

On the steps he hesitated a moment. "Had I better go back now?" he thought. "No; she won't have her little tale of woe ready, and might be put out if I call to-night. I might give myself away, too. Better have time to get my speech prepared." And this astute young man went in and proceeded to make himself comfortable.

The next evening, with his usual light heart and good spirits, he rang the door bell of the Field mansion. Yes, Miss Field was in, Peter said. Ferris went into the drawing-room and sat down, running rapidly over in his mind the various tender speeches he had prepared for the emergency. Bernice was a long time coming, he thought, for one who expected him.

Presently she entered—slowly—heavily. Her head bent low over her ample bosom, and her breath came short and fast. Ferris went forward to meet her, his arms outstretched. He was something of an actor himself, and he knew it.

"Bernice! Darling! What is the trouble with my little girl?" (Another good stroke. Miss Field liked to be called "little.")

"Oh! Arthur! Arthur! I don't know how to tell you. It is too dreadful! Papa—"

"What! Has your father been—"

"Oh! no, not that, but—but worse! Arthur, we are—beggars!"

And Miss Field, delivering these last words with wonderful impressiveness, hung her head and sobbed bitterly behind her lace handkerchief.

Then it was that Ferris, like the young man of action that he was, put his arm as far round his tearful fiancee as possible, and, with some difficulty, led her to a seat and pulled her head down on his glossy shirt front.

He was very, very sorry, as she must know. But it was nothing. Her father would recoup himself—he had many influential friends. As for her, had she not him—her Arthur? He would not, he once interrupted her to say, permit her, through a sense of false pride, to cast him off now, when she most needed him. No, never!

He had three thousand a year. It was not much, he knew, but they could live on it. And did she suppose, for one instant, that he had expected to live on his wife's money? No! A thousand times, no!

"We will have a real quiet little wedding, dearest, and, after it is over, we will go quietly to our own little cottage in the suburbs, which you and I will get ready in the meantime, and there we will be the happiest couple in the world. What! Bernice, am I to understand that you laugh at my cherished plans?"

For Bernice had leaped to her feet and was laughing heartily.

"Why, you foolish boy, I was only teasing you a bit. Don't you think I'd make a good actress? Papa and I haven't lost a—"

Here was Mr. Ferris' opportunity. She had doubted him; oh, cruel blow. If she could not trust him now, how could she have any faith in him when they were married? Perhaps, after all, it were best—

And he strode haughtily to the door.

But this was not part of Miss Field's programme, and she did what any very-much-in-love female would do under like circumstances, so that, in a very few seconds, two people were sitting on a divan in a very lover-like attitude, indeed.

An hour or so later, a young man, walking briskly down the street, was reflecting on the vagaries of chance and his own good luck.

If Peter had been at the door—if he had been ten minutes later—if he had sneezed in the hall—if—

"It was an awfully close shave," he reflected, and he stopped and shook hands with himself, much to the amazement of the policeman on the corner.—R. L. Ketchum, in San Francisco Argonaut.

- Reciprocity.—Mrs. Upperson Walker—"Do go and see Dr. Pulser and tell him all about your case. What's the use of having a doctor if you can't trust him?" Mr. Upperson Walker—"Ah, that isn't the trouble. I'm afraid he won't trust me!"—N. Y. Truth.

FIRESIDE FRAGMENTS.

—Chocolate Icing.—Put into a sauce pan half a pound of powdered loaf sugar, two ounces of grated chocolate and about one gill of water. Stir on the fire until the mixture assumes the consistency of smooth, thick cream.—Detroit Detroit Press.

—Baked Tomatoes.—Cut the tomatoes in halves; pour juice and pulp over some crumbled bread; pepper and salt. Fill up the tomatoes with the mixture; put in a baking-dish; sprinkle with crumbs of bread, little salt and pepper, some bits of butter, and bake.—Boston Budget.

—Lemon Jelly with Banana.—Make some lemon jelly, using three lemons, a cupful of sugar to half a box of gelatine. Let it get a little stiff. Peel and slice quite thin some fine solid fine bananas. Pour a layer of jelly in a mould, then put in a layer of bananas, then another of jelly, and so on, until the mould is full. Let it stiffen, and serve on a bed of stiffly whipped cream.—Household Monthly.

—Lobster Soup.—The liquor from a can of lobster, a pint of milk and a pint of stock. Heat to boiling in different vessels the milk and stock. Heat the lobster liquor, but do not boil. Pour the stock into the tureen, whisk in the milk, and the lobster liquor, salt, a speck of cayenne and a grating of nutmeg. Whisk thoroughly and serve.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Deviled Biscuit.—Make two tablespoonfuls of butter very soft, and stir into it one teaspoonful of mixed mustard and about one-tenth of a teaspoonful of cayenne. Spread this on six thin water crackers or eight Saltenas, putting a thin coating on both sides of the cracker. Place in the toaster and hold over the fire until brown on both sides. Serve hot with cheese.—Good Housekeeping.

—The suggestion is offered by a clever needle-woman that a better stocking darner than the wooden or porcelain egg or polished solid cup is a discarded slipper sole, or rather the sole of a discarded slipper, for the two should remain united. This inserted in the stocking offers a smooth and more available surface for stretching the hole over than any other.—N. Y. Times.

—Roasting Coffee.—Many people grind their coffee but do not roast it, and if it is bought in large quantities the delightful aroma that always attends freshly roasted coffee is in time lost. If the cook will place in the oven each morning, for a few minutes before grinding, the quantity she is to use, the same result may be obtained as if it were freshly roasted.—Food.

—For burns take equal parts of linseed oil and lime water mixed and poured over the burn. A cotton or linen cloth wrung out of the mixture and laid upon the wound. If this preparation is faithfully used it will be found to remove pain and give a great deal of comfort. Pure glycerine is a most excellent remedy also. When first applied it causes smarting, but this soon ceases and the actual pain from the burn is much relieved. Glycerine is said to favor rapid healing. The sooner it is applied after the accident the quicker good results will be obtained.

—Fried Chicken. — To prepare the chicken, dress and wash thoroughly, cut up the usual way, put into boiling water to cover it and boil until tender, then remove from the vessel, allowing the gravy to remain. Drain the chicken and roll in flour, season with salt and pepper. Place in a hot frying-pan a lump of butter, into which you place the chicken, frying it to a nice brown and turning it often. Have a flat dish in the oven which will be warm to receive the chicken when done. To make the gravy use the liquid the fowl was boiled in, put it into the frying pan and thicken with a teaspoonful of flour and season with pepper and salt; pour a little over the chicken and garnish with celery leaves.—N. Y. World.

DISHONEST PRACTICE.

The Way Many Men Justify Unprincipled Dealings.

A few years ago a well-known financier died in New York. His family were overwhelmed with grief. He had been a faithful and tender husband and father. The servants of his household stood sobbing around the door of his chamber when he was dead. He had been always, they said, kind and just to them.

When the estate was settled there was not the claim of a penny against it from any tradesman. Butcher, baker all persons whom he employed, had been paid cash day by day.

One of his maxims had been, "It is dishonest to owe a poor man for his labor. That is his capital. Pay him cash or allow him interest."

Yet this man, who in his individual dealings was scrupulously honest and kind, had gained his fortune by shrewd remorseless management of a great corporation that controlled a monopoly and fattened on the necessities of the people. The public was preyed upon by the monster as by some ravenous beast, and a whole community suffered that it might grow rich and powerful.

This man used to try to answer the reproaches of his conscience by saying with a laugh:

"I am not personally responsible. I keep my own hands clean. You must not look for a soul or conscience in a corporation."

His peculiar moral blindness is a common disease, and his method of reasoning a popular one.

Corporations, firms, town councils even school committees will be guilty of unjust, cruel and sometimes dishonest acts from which the individual members would turn with indignation in a private transaction. A merchant who would scorn to cheat a customer by adulterating his goods will join a corporation in watering stock, and thus, by enriching himself, will rob every ignorant purchaser who may afterward become a shareholder.

The corporation, it is true, has no soul of its own, but the soul of each member is responsible for its acts if he aids and approves them. He forgets too, that there will come a day of reckoning when God will deal, not with rings, or clubs or firms, but with each man who has belonged to them.—Youth's Companion.

Parisian Fads.

Lavender salts are said to prevent influenza, or at all events to modify its effects, so they have been, of late, on many and many a table, sometimes in gold-topped bottles, larger than full sized tumblers. On some of these stoppers a diamond fly, an ivy leaf, or a bar of music, with the clef and notes in small rubies, emeralds, or turquoises are fixed. These designs are also much in favor as pins. Peau d'Espagne and white lilac are among the fashionable perfumes of the day. There are some little innocent-looking silken bags which, on being turned inside out and tied up, form powder puffs of the usual size.—Chicago Tribune.

WOMEN'S DRESSES.

Reformers Should Make of Dame Fashion a Friend and Ally.

I wonder if there is ever a woman who is obliged to walk about in wet weather who in her secret heart does not rebel against the damp and mud-bedraggled skirts that she is forced to carry around with her.

We have observed all sorts of odd designs and models for "improved" garments. The idea and intention of most of these is excellent, but the result is not exactly successful. They are usually undeniably ugly, and the average woman will have nothing to do with them. But is there not something that we can do? What a glorious thing it would be if we would all look for a little while to the days when our skirts reached only to our boot-tops, and remembering the freedom and ease of movement then possible, and how prisoned and confined we felt in our first long frocks, would cease racking our brains and straining our fancies in devising long, hideous, flapping "trouserettes" or "divided skirts," simply sit down instead, cut off a few superfluous inches from the bottom of our skirts, put on a pair of leggings or high boots, and be happy.

If our modern dress reformers were wise in their generation, they would make a friend and ally of Dame Fashion. She is an adversary not to be despised, and they should propitiate her in every possible and reasonable way. There are many useful lessons that they might learn of her as to the manner in which it is possible to bring about successfully any contemplated change in dress. One of the most important of these lessons is that of the way in which she gradually familiarizes the eyes of her followers with her various extremes, instead of trying to force them upon her votaries at once, and in their entirety. Why can not we get short skirts in that way?

Some years ago Lady Florence Dixie proposed a costume desirable, not only on account of its comfort and grace and picturesque beauty, which are among its possibilities, but because it is so easily attainable; the battle in its favor is already half won, and, quite recently, Miss Mary F. Seymour has been advocating a very similar style of dress. The principal feature of both of these reform gowns is the short skirt. Lady Florence Dixie's ideal dress consists of a flannel shirt, knickerbockers, kilt and loose jacket; the skirt of Miss Seymour's is plain or kilted, as one prefers, and the waist is made in any style that is comfortable and becoming, and is supplied with plenty of pockets; with both, long leggings are to be worn. Already such a costume is worn as a mountain dress and by many women who fish or hunt, and a few bolder spirits are trying to bring it into the cities as a rainy-day dress all the year round. The boating dress, the bathing dress, the tennis dress, the bicycle dress, the gymnasium dress are all departures from the every-day standard in this direction. All practical and accepted efforts toward the freedom to be obtained by the wearing of less hampering garments seem to tend this way. The shirt waist and the loose jacket, in the form of a serge or flannel blazer, are already "good form" for a street or traveling gown, although the short skirts that accompany them in the country have not yet ventured into town. Comfort can be had without sacrificing either modesty or grace.—Harper's Bazar.

Odd Beliefs of Children.

The superstitions of children at the south, as used in their little games, "telling fortunes," etc., are very interesting. For instance, in some parts of the south in the game of "tag" if the boy or girl giving the "tag" is quick enough to say: "Ticky, ticky, tag, my tag's poison, you can't get my tag till to-morrow after sundown," that girl or boy is under a "spell" and is exempt from "tags" until the time specified, after which the "spell" is off. In making a wish that they are anxious to have come true they pick up a stone that is embedded in the ground, spit on the under side and replace it, being careful to fit it in just as it was; by so doing they think they will "get their wish." The same method is used for curing toothache, but first the gum around the tooth is picked until it bleeds. Warts also are removed in this way. They believe that a tooth that is extracted should always be buried; otherwise the coming one will be a dog's tooth.—Toledo Blade.

RETAIN YOUR SENSES!

Could You If You Were Confined in an Asylum?

Some Interesting Facts from a Prominent Scientific Man Who Has Had a Most Valuable Experience.

(Chicago Journal.)

We sometimes see in the papers a thrilling account of where a perfectly sane person has been confined in an asylum. Think of it, reader! How long would you retain your senses if you were confined with a number of lunatics, night and day, and yet think of the physicians in charge of these patients who are compelled, day by day and year by year, to live among them. What wonderful opportunities they have for studying characteristics and vagaries; what a wonderful chance for learning the miseries of life and how best to overcome them.

We are brought to these reflections by a conversation lately had with Dr. J. C. Spray, of 163 State Street, Chicago. For nearly ten years Doctor Spray was in charge of the Jefferson, now Dunning, Institute, at Dunning, Ill. This tremendous institution contained about twelve hundred patients in the Insane Department, and fifteen hundred in the infirmary. Among this large number of persons there were a vast number of physical ailments. Dr. Spray, speaking about it, said:

"I traced the great cause for most of the mental and indeed physical disorders very carefully, and while some authorities make an estimate that seventy-five per cent. of the people in the United States are afflicted with some form of kidney disease, I do not think that the rate is so high, taking all ages into consideration. Before middle life it is less than seventy-five per cent. but after middle life it is, I should think, fully that percentage."

"This is something terrible, Doctor. Few people can certainly be aware that so large a percentage exists?"

The Doctor thought a moment and then said: "It is a fact not generally recognized that where a person has diseased kidneys and the organs fail to perform their functions of removing the waste and the impurities from the system, it soon produces melancholia. As a result our asylums are filled to overflowing, while if the people would strike at the root of the matter and see that their kidneys were in good order, there would be fewer patients in the asylums. I have noticed that a large portion of all paresis cases had kidney difficulties."

"What have you found, Doctor, to be the standard and most reliable remedy in such cases?"

Dr. Spray spoke with great confidence. He said: "Having so many cases to treat, I tried various remedies, and after a long and exhaustive trial, finally decided that Warner's Safe Cure was the best, most effective and most reliable remedy. I found it specially reliable in cases of incipient Bright's disease. It is certain to stop it, and even in the advanced conditions it allays the disease, and to my surprise at first, cured many cases. Before structural changes set in, it is certain to cure, if properly administered."

"Has your experience while at the asylum, Doctor, been confirmed in your general practice since leaving it?"

"Yes. I have occasion to use the Safe Cure almost daily. Whenever I find traces of albumen in the urine of a patient, I prescribe the Safe Cure, and in nearly every instance where I notice indications of nervous troubles, I analyze the urine, and almost invariably find that it is caused by some affection of the kidneys. I now have a patient to whom I am giving the Safe Cure, and find that it is having the desired effect. Some time ago a gentleman came to me, who had been examined for life insurance, and traces of albumen were found. I advised the use of the Safe Cure, and he passed the examination without difficulty after having used it."

"I understand, then, Doctor, that you attribute a large percentage of the ills of life to some disease of the kidneys, and that you have found the remedy of which you speak the most effective in such cases."

"Yes. I have no hesitation in saying that Warner's Safe Cure has my unqualified endorsement. I use it constantly, and would not do so unless I thought it possessed curative qualities."

The high standing, wide experience and great success of Dr. Spray make his words exceedingly impressive. Their sincerity cannot be questioned, and their truthfulness is absolute. Impressed with this fact, and realizing the importance of the same, I have transcribed his words in full and give them herewith.

DELANO DIARY

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Rye is headed out and a fine crop is in prospect.

—19cts per pound for ground coffee is getting down cheap.

—Potatoes are in demand, now is the time to get rid of your surplus.

—Cleveland has the lead for Presidential Candidate here by all odds.

—John Sturman has moved into his new residence on South River street.

—Hay is scarce and brings a good price. Provident farmers are reaping a benefit.

—The additional sidewalk built in our village this summer is useful as well as ornamental.

—Henry Inwie of Hanover was over last week after a jag of hay and his mowing machine.

—Dr. Sturman was in on Wednesday with that thousand dollar team of his after a load of corn for his hogs.

—It does seem as if their should be some way for building a bridge at Wright's Ford. They need one there.

—A new dealer in farm machinery and new photograph gallery are additions to our town this week and new Inmber yard is promised in the near future.

—Several Delanoites are receiving visits from friends in the far east who taking advantage ot the reduced fare for convention time, have ventured to come this far from home.

—A Special meeting of the City Council was held on Friday evening to allow bills for re-arranging the city hall. The hall has been made considerable longer, nicely papered and is now quite neat and commodious, —The street commissoner has materially benefited the traveling public by graveling the Watertown road inside the village limits. The Woodland road has also been repaired nicely in several places. Let the good work go on.

—The committee on 4th of July speakers have taken time by the forelock and secured a speaker so soon and made a good selection in choosing Judge Thomas Canty, of Minneapolis, who has been notified and promised that he would be here.

—T. K. Danforth says I have been troubled for three or four years with kidney trouble and lame back have to turn over a dozen or so times during the night for rest; last night I put on a "Good Samaritan Electric Belt" which obviated the whole difficulty so that I got up free from pain for the first time in years, this morning. Belts for sale at the Danforth House.

—Quite a delegation from Delano has gone on each train during the week to Minneapolis to attend or to find out what they could concerning the Convention. Quite a difference of opinion seems to be entertained by those who have been down. Some say Blaine, sure, others Harrison, while many think neither can secure the nomination. Things seem much mixed. One gentleman came back with a flowing Blaine badge while he hurrahed for Harrison.

—The very effective manner in which the fire companies succeeded in squelching the blaze on Mr. Wies' property a few days ago. When the cistern at the town pump was full and handy by is sufficient evidence to our villagergers that more cisterns in different parts of the town, or arrangements of some other kind for extinguishing fire, when it occurs in our midst is needed. Had not the engine been brought into play it is altogether likely the entire block of buildings would have gone up in smoke. Let us have some fire extinguishers. The engine works well where water is plenty. Let us have at places plenty of water provided places convenient for us where it is able to be needed.

—Good roads are among the necessary surroundings to a prosperous village. People will drive miles to neighboring villages rather than be forced to go a few rods over such roads as that on the Watertown road leading into town in the condition it has been for several weeks. A few loads of gravel would materially aid in making it passable. And then if the R. R. crossing was properly arranged under the track many people would feel thankful, and the merchants of the village would see many customers that do not come as often as they would if the roads were better. Naturally the roads in our neighborhood are good and such places as that mentioned and a few more holes that could be easily mended should not be allowed to go unlookedafter.

—Yes we do. We pay cash for eggs. C. H. Green & Co. 33-3t.

—Rev. Millspaugh held services on Monday evening.

—Services will be held on Sabbath at the Presbyterian church.

—Read the committee appointments of the National Republican Convention on the inside of this paper.

—The children's day concert has been postponed and will not occur next Sunday as previously announced.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. Church will meet at the parsonage Friday afternoon at half past two.

—We are informed that it is the intention of the Delano Dramatic club to appear in Buffalo on Tuesday next.

—The 4th of July committees meet on Monday evening at the hall to report and further complete the programme for the 4th. Be on hand at 8.

—One of our readers from the country called in the other day to say that the reason Gutzwiller is growling at Gus is because Gus want let him into his place of business any more on Sunday.

—Since cash has been payed in our village for farm produce more is marketed here than before. People like to handle money even if they pay it out to the same pockets that they received it from a few minutes past by.

—We are thankful to Hon. J. N. Stacy and Co. for a copy of their "Convention Manuel and Visitors Guide for Republican Convention. It is a useful book of political informatson and can be had of them for 50 cts each.

—The Delano Dramatic Club surprised even its most sanguine friends last night in its rendering of "The Taamps Daughter." Many visitors from abroad were present all pronounced good. It was a success. If you don't believe it ask Kelly. It will be repeated to-night.

—The reading of the Declaration of Independence on the 4th of July was duly provided for, at the meeting held at the city hall, on Saturday, May 30, by the election of Charles S. Hawker, but through some inadvertance the Secretary's minutes failed to show that fact and his name did not appear in the published lists of elections. Charley has performed the feat before and is eminently qualified to do the subject justice.

County Cullings.

Court convened at Buffalo last Monday and adjonrned for one week.

While in Maple Lake recently we were informed by a former Alliance man that the club there, after counting noses concluded to disband and most of the members returned to their first love true Democracy.

The Buffalo Journal of this week has a picture representing an empty Treasury and intimating that the Democrats have squandered the country's funds. How would some of old grovers vetoes have done in that event?

We have been informed that Joel Florida, father of George Florida now of Rockford was the first Post Master at that place with J. R. Ames as assistant. And that N. G. Leighton was first at Leighton, Hennepin county; both offices having been established in the winter of 1856-7.

Among Annandale items in the Buffalo Journal we notice "Dr Catlin of the BUFFALO GAZETTE was a visitor here on Thursday much suprised at our metropolitan apperance and concludes we were haveng a boom". We acknowledge the corn, we have read considerable about the little city by the lakes; of the enterprise of its citizens; of the rapid increase of price on corner lots of the new buildings being erected &c., &c., but after all we are obliged to admit that on visiting the place we were suprised and thought there must have been a boom, but on diligent inquiry could find none to admit but that it is all a gradual steady solid grawth and we would now advise Delano people to look well to their laurals as Wright County's metropolis.

Loss Paid.

Last Sunday while away from home at church, the house of John Dusa who lives a few miles West of town took fire supposed to be from sparks from the stove. By the timely arrival of a friend the house was saved from utter destruction. On Wednesday the loss was promptly settled by Mr. Zeibarth agent for St. Paul Fire and Marine Co. with which Co. Mr. Dusa was insured.

Their Silver Wedding.

On the 19th of the present month Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Sanborn completed a quater of a century of maried life. Their friends celebrated the event by coming in, totally unexpected, to the number of a hundred or more spending a social hour and leaving behind them substantial tokens of their good will. The callers began to assemble at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the stream of friends continued from then until late in the evening. Mrs. Sanborn was out riding when the first of the company came and received a complete surprise.

Among the gifts which were brought were a silver ice-pitcure and goblets from Mrs. Sanborn's family: a silver sugar shell and butter knife from Mrs. Osborn: two handsome upholstered oak chairs and a dozen engraved glasses from ladies in Winslow. No presentation remarks were made but Mr. Sanborn acknowledged the kindness of all who had taken part in the celebration of the day in a short speach, but full of feeling.—The Waterville Mail.

Mrs. Sanborn is a sister of Mrs Wm. Hawker, and the family formerly lived here.

A good deal is being written in the newspapers now-a-days in commendation of Miss Ella Meeke, principal of the school at Groveland Park, near Minneapolis, whose friends are strongly advocating her nomination by the Republicans for the office of Superintendent of Schools for Hennepin County. She is said to be so well liked in several localities where her party is very weak that, if she is a candidate, she will receive every vote cast in those precincts She is probably the only person in Hennepin County who would stand the ghost of a chance of defeating the present Democratic incumbent, Prof. James A. Lewis, who has made an excellent superintendent, and who is himself so popular throughout the county that not a few Republicans would be glad to see their party endorse his renomination. If Miss Meeke will allow her name to come before the convention, and it is confidently believed she will, her nomination is as certain as sunrise. Her election is, of course, doubtful, but not improbable.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE FLAG AT HALF MAST.

On Friday, June 10, 1892, on hearing of the re-nomination of Ben Harrison for President, the attempt was made to raise a large flag on a liberty pole which was raised in 1884 for James G. Blaine, when at half mast the wire slipped from the pulley, and unable to raise or lower the flag it was left at half mast until Tuesday suggesting the following lines:

Oh! What does it mean. The flag at half mast?
Delano citizens eagerly asked
As on the soft breeze the emblem did float,
Calm and serene as music by note.

The feeling of doom was darker yet,
When the flag at the mast was wet,
After the rains during the night,
It presented a pitiful sight.

Whose gone to his home? Who has crossed the tide?
Is some great man dead? Did Blaine Suicide?
Oh! What is the matter? Large crowds say,
As the farmers gather on fairday.

Trainmen and travelers frequently asked,
As over the Great Northern they passed,
Morning and evening from Orient and Occident.
Whose dead? Is it the President?

Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday,
At half mast through night and day.
Floating in the breeze, soaking in the rain,
Hailed on. How can it bear the strain?

How? The whole nation wonders
How, amid calms, storms, lightnings and thunders;
Now tattered and torn, the flag at half mast,
How much longer can the old flag last.

Was ever before a country's flag
Left at half mast to fray to a rag,
When raised in honor of candidates
For Presidents of United States?

DELANO, Minn., June 13, '92.

THE Republicans are coming before the people with the McKinley bill with Bill McKinley left out.

THE ticket chosen at the convention in our neighboring city a few days since is Benjamin Harrison for President and Whitelaw Reid for Vice President, Mr. Harrison is the present incumbent and Mr. Reid is the Editor of the New York Tribune, Horace Greelys old paper.

IN making their platform at the Minneapolis Convention the Republican party undertook quite a difficult task when it goes to fighting the expressed wishes of the voters of the United States in the manner implied there. First it says "we re-affirm the American doctrine of protection," at present the McKinley bill, against which the popular voted in 1888 was 95,504 for Cleveland over Harrison. Then they "denounce the efforts of the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives to destroy our tariff laws by piece meal as manifested by their attacks upon wool, lead and lead ores, the chief products of a number of states and we ask the people for their judgment thereon." Ask the people for their judgement thereon! How came this Democratic majority in Congress? Did not the people give them judgment thereon, when they sent these Congressmen to Washington for the purpose of making changes in the outrageous McKinley bill against which they had already expressed themselves.

"TOM REED said to the Minneapolis Convention. "The Blaine men seem to have a plurality if not a majority. I am with them. But one thing must not be forgotten: The fight has to be made on the tariff issue whether the party likes it or not. The contest will be on the McKinley bill, and who is a better man than Bill McKinley for the Standard bearer." The 239 votes from the solid south answered, Harrison!

Tariff Pictures.

Republican reciprocity is doing effective work in gaining new markets for the American producer. Our exports to Cuba of corn, wheat, flour, butter, cheese and refined petroleum for the three months ending March 31, 1891, were $332,831.

For the corresponding period ending March 31, 1892, they were $1,117,130.

New York Press, June 10.

Why is it that Reciprocity with every nation would not be as advantageous to the United States as it is with Cuba? The press was, all along, a Blaine supporter, and now that the convention has been and decided againgt the above plan by electing McKinley Reciprocity's worst enemy as chairman of the convention and relegating the great leader of the party and firm supporter of Reciprocity James G. Blaine to the shades of oblivion it seems that old Grover will stand a fine chance of receiving the votes favoring the plan of trading in the markets of the world.

THE New York Press, one of the leading Republican papers of the country, in a lengthy editorial, accepts the situation brought about by the re-nomination of Benjamin Harrison as gracefully as it well can but cannot resist the tempation of letting its favorite down, after giving its readers to understand that there was some dozen names as good as the selection made, in the following manner: "But one name besides there is that towers above even these the name of that idol of the party and the people, a name that was never heard without eliciting thunders of applause that made the welkin ring a name to conjure with inspiring, thrilling, stiring the blood like a bugle blast—BLAINE! BLAINE! JAMES G. BLAINE! Nevertheless, with all this wealth of material to choose from, it remains true that BENJAMIN HARRISON of Indiana no not of Indiana, but of the United States was the only candidate before the convention, though it took several days for that fact to be universally understood. Neither SHERMAN nor ALLISON nor MCKINLEY nor REED asked for the nomination ALGER unaffectedly expressed his preference for another than himself. Mr. BLAINE had months before thrust the prize from him when it could have been his without asking, and by no word, written or spoken, did he at any later time give any one authority to say that he had changed his mind." Thus the Press sums up that as Harrison was the only candidate really before the convention he was chosen, not because he was the peoples choice.

DELANO Republicans have apparently lost the last grain of party pride since the renomination of Ben Harrison for President. On hearing the news on Friday afternoon they attempted to hoist their flag on the pole that was raised in 1882 for James G. Blaine, amidst some enthusiasm although their leader then was doomed to defeat. The pole had been recently taken down and fitted up with a new wire rope preparatory to floating the national colors when the convention's choice should be made known. Blaine has for a quarter of a century been considered the great leader of the party. His reciprocity schemes helped take off the wire edge of the McKinley bill and aided wonderfully in holding the party together in the west generally as well as in Delano in particular. But when the great leader, stepped down and out of his seat as Secretary of State, just before the nominating convention met, they were taken by surprise and rather than take another leader allowed the office holders and office seekers to re-nominate a man who was by no means their choice and consequently the lethargy existing in the party throughout the length and breadth of the United States concerning the recent nomination. Thus we explain the feelings of men who will allow the flag of our country to float for four nights at half mast as if in memorian of some departed friend, causing passers by over one of the throughfares from the Atlantic to the Pacific to pause and inquire, who is dead? Who before in the history of our couhtry can produce an instance where a political party has attempted to hoist the flag of the United States and succeed in getting it half mast and becoming so disgusted simply because the rope slipped out of the pully and would not allow the flag to be pulled up or down as to go away and leave it for four long days and nights floating as deaths' warning to the breezes and storms to be battered with rain and pelted with hail the elements doing their part toward taking it down! Such indifference! How long would this state of affairs have existed had the plumed Knight been the nominee?

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

GENERAL REMARKS.

In the locust or grasshopper raid of 1856, the insects after depositing their eggs remained in some localities until killed by cold weather and snows of the succeeding fall and winter, while in others they disappeared in a manner about as mysterious, to the observation of the settlers, as was their appearance in the previous August:

From whence they came or whither they went no one knew.

In the spring of 1857, with the shooting growth of both, the spontaneous and cultivated vegetation, came the numberless brood of young grasshoppers hatched from the eggs deposited in the earth the previous fall, and proceeded to devour the vegetation that emerged from the earth with them; the blade of hardy grass of the native meadows suffering the same fate as the most tender garden plant brought in by the settler, so that the prospect of raising a crop during the season of 1857 was truly discouraging. Toward the latter part of June, and after the young grasshoppers had developed from small but destructive insects, scarcely visible to the eye, restlessly hopping and migrating over the cultivated spots, to well matured grasshoppers provided with perfect wings, began to take flight in a southerly direction and about July 1st, they had totally disppeared from the country.

Following which some vegetation planted and replanted during the operations of the grasshoppers and and other vegetation of later varieties planted after the pests had left, a partial crop was raised that season, yet not sufficient to make the little forest communities self sustaining in a general sense. It was however a case where the discouragingly late springs of Minesota, as they were regarded by the early settlers, as compared with those of the more southernly climes, proved to be a benefit. The late planted vegetation rallying from the effects of the insects, while earlier perished.

Money continued to circulate without stringency in the cities of St. Paul, St. Anthony, and Minneapolis, and about the townsites still continuing to be laid out in the more remote districts of the state, and wildcat speculations and enterprises became rife; and whenever the settlers' exchequer or provisions became short, all that was necessary on his part was to apply for employment at some of these cities or townsites, which he readily obtained remunerative wages and he was soon enabled to lug or have toted to his cabin, by oxteam either his own or his friendly neighbors, sufficient supplies to keep his household running in case he had a family, or himself if unmarried, during the necessary occupation of his premise; to comply with the pre-emption law to hold his claim in case he had not yet pre-empted.

On the disappearance of the grasshoppers and the financial and industrial condition of the country remaining apparently prosperious the settlers again looked hopefully to the future, and during the latter part of that summer it seemed as if the grasshopper raid had only been a ripple in the stream of prosperity flowing all over the country.

This apparent prosperity was caused by the continued immigration of settlers. Minnesota had not yet become to any extent a producing or exporting country. A limited amount of the lumber manufactured at St Anthony's Falls and Stillwater being about the only product shipped abroad, and immigration as a rule being something only of an incidental or freakish existence so that the financial and commercial condition of the country did not have much permanency, and was not in condition to withstand the shock produced by the general financial crisis of the fall of 1857. Much of the circulating medium of Minnesota was paper money issued by banks in various states of the Union which became defunct by the effects of the financial crash and their issue therefore becoming worthless, and the specie in circulation also disappeared very rapidly so the prospect for the coming winter to the average Minnesotian was indeed gloomy. Having lost two crops crops by grasshoppers and no money to be earned. Those parties who were conducting townsites and steam sawmills enterprises had also suffered by the great financial revulsion and were too in the throes of bankruptcy from having purchased merchandise or machinery on credit, and being refused further credit, were about as destitute as the average settler so that further employment with them was out of the question. Many abandoned the country being aided by friends in the east and making hast to take steamers at St. Paul before closing of navigation of the fall of 1857, the latter being the only means of general travel to and from the country then. Clearings were left to resume their native wildness. Others of previous experience in pioneering consequently better fortified for the emergency, both in finances and courage remained; while others were financially unable to leave were obliged to remain and make the best of it.

Many of the settlers did not have much else than Indian corn, potatoes and other vegetables for subsistence, they being of the short crops which they succeeded in rescueing from grasshoppers of the previous season which was accompanied by an occasional piece of venison captured through the sporting skill of the pioneer. The abundance of game was a God-send to the pioneer then. While many of limited circumstances succeeded in sustaining themselves through the winter by their own means and efforts, accompanied in many cases by means raised from mortgaging their lands, some having pre-empted soon after setting in the country, while others pre-empted on the pressure of this occasion to enable them to raise means. These loans were made from bankers and parties at Minneapolis who possessed and controlled means, and who foresaw a prosperious future to the country and had no hesitancy in taking the fertile acres of the "big woods" as securety at a rate of a few dollars per acre to secure loans bearing three and four per cent per month interest, other parties were aided by means sent to them by relatives and friends in the east.

The lumbering interests also suffered by the great financial crash still there were some lumbering operations carried on that winter in pineries, where some of the settlers found employment, which in some cases was rather unsatisfactory to the employers as the employers, under their straightened financial conditions were unable to pay their (the employes) on returning from the lumber woods in the spring.

During the winter of 1857-8, bank notes purporting to be issued by a bank at Gosport, Ind., and by a bank at Tekama, Neb., passed current about Minneapolis and the vicinity extending into the "big woods" under assurance of stability, given by business firms of Minneapolis, Snyder and McFarland Real Estate and Loans being one of those firms. This currency was known as the Gosport and was taken and passed by them without asking many questions as to its stability. It being about the only circulating medium to be seen at that time, and was supposed to have performed a good service.

Grasshoppers and financial crashes could not deprive Minnesota of its healthy climate. The settler was blessed with health and strength which was a great aid to him in combatting the conditions following those calamities.

Thus the winter of 1857-8, an experience never to be forgotten by the old settler, was passed.

A CYCLONE!

At Wells Minnesoto.

A fearful cyclone passed over parts of Southern Minnesota yesterday killing and wounding many and destroying vast amounts of property.

MISS CRUSEN the teacher who was assaulted by the Lents, whose child she had punished for disobedience at Blue Earth City has been awarded $14,000, damages.

IN opposing a fusion or a tangling Alliance with any party Mr. Owen the Alliance Candidate for Govener confirms his his already established reputation as a man of principal.

THE disgust of fusion business as expressed by Alliance people is really there strongest point for gaining votes. If they have taken up principals which the old parties will not, and are honest in them they will stand up for them and not go to work and join hand in hand with the parties and principals to which they are opposed, for the sake of getting a few scheming politiciang into office.

DEMOCRATIC delegates and others are allready gathering at Chicago to participate in the National Democratic Convention which opens on Tuesday June 21, and which is to choose a succesor to Benjamin Harrison as President of the United States. Grover Clevand it is claimed has secured within 22 votes of the requisite two reqthirds requred to nominite him. Hill, Gorman, Carlisle, Palmer, Morrison, Russel, Flower, Boise, Campbell and other names are mentioned as possibilities in case old Grover is not successful, which shows that for good materal for President the Democric party has no lack. But Clevand is the choice.

Tariff is a Tax.
Grover Cleveland says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
Thomas Wilson says so.

Tariff is a Tax.
The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

A BIBLE recently issued from the Oxford university press is only 3¾ inches in length, 2⅛ inches wide and ⅜ of an inch in thickness.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA produces 180,000,000 oranges a year—not enough to give three oranges to each inhabitant of the United States.

THERE are at present in China only 1,022 citizens of the United States, nearly half of whom are women. Nearly one-half, or 506, are missionaries.

HENRY GEORGE believes that writer's paralysis, or cramp, comes from the use of steel pens. "Who ever heard of it in the days of the quill pen?" he asks.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET will allow herself to talk about America and the Americans, but she distinctly declares that she will not write a book upon the subject.

JULES SIMON, one of the clearest headed statesmen in Europe, thus views the situation over there: "Peace, barring accidents. But accidents happen so easily."

A YOUNG Mexican woman claiming to be possessed of divine power has been banished, being charged by the Mexican government with having instigated an Indian uprising.

MISS HANNAH FAIRCHILD, of Westport, Conn., is in her 78th year. She has been a member of Christ church for fifty-five years and has not missed a service during that period.

ALEXANDER HOCKADY, of Blue River township, Ky., is one hundred and twelve years old. He has taken but one dose of medicine, and as he was nearly one hundred when he swallowed it he doesn't think much of drugs.

THERE are 1,022 Americans residing in China, and 506 of these are women engaged in mission work. In case of their expulsion Christianity will be a larger sufferer than commerce, as far as the actual residents are concerned.

A CURIOUS superstition prevails in Norway. When people are in quest of a drowned body, they row to and fro with a rooster in the boat, fully expecting that the bird will crow when the boat reaches the spot where the corpse lies.

THE population of the German empire was 49,428,470 December 1, 1890. The relative numbers of the leading German states stand as follows: Prussia, 29,957,367; Bavaria, 5,594,982; Saxony, 3,502,684; Wurtemburg, 2,036,552; Baden, 1,657,867; Elsass-Lorthringen, 1,602,506; Hess, 992,883.

THE following countries have a larger national debt than the United States: Austria, Hungary, France, German States, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Spain and Turkey. The national debt of France is the largest, being $6,427,500,000, against $862,420,541, the national debt of the United States.

ANOTHER serious duel has occurred in France. A man who had been compromised in a family scandal fought with the editor of the paper in which a report of the facts was published. Both parties were severely wounded. It may be that after a time French duels will become something besides mere matters of form or comedies. In this case the editor was slashed with a sword until he could stand no longer.

ALL the financial reports plainly prove that the United States is the only leading nation in the world in which general prosperity exists at the present time. The foreign trade balance in favor of the United States during the twelve months ended April 30, 1892, was $179,406,514. The increase of exports of the United States during the twelve months ending April 30, 1892, was 15.02 per cent. It is learned from British authorities that there was a decrease in British exports during the calendar year 1891 of 5.6 per cent.

SOME people are born freckled and others have freckles thrust upon them. The former class might as well accept their freckles as a dispensation of Providence, for nothing can be done for them. The latter can always get rid of their affliction, says the Scientific American, by using a couple of drachms of sal ammonia with an ounce of German cologne, the solution mixed with a pint of distilled water. Applied two or three times a day, states one of our contemporaries, it will cure the worst case of acquired freckles on record.

THE new railroad through the Holy Land will run from Acre to Damascus, along the eastern side of Mount Carmel, thence across the Esdraelon plain, by Nazareth, Nain, Jezreel and Beisan to the river Jordan, along the eastern shores of the sea of Galilee to the Hauran plateau or plains of Bashan, and thence across the plain of Damascus, skirting the eastern base of Mount Hermon. This road will probably in due time become part of a trunk line to the Persian gulf and India. The names given are familiar to Bible readers, and the project will open a land of wonderful interest to them.

THE life of an editor in Turkey is far from being a happy one. He is not allowed to publish novels that have not been approved by a court official, petitions regarding abuses of the administration, and must avoid the names of prominent people. If an officeholder be accused of theft or other crime the event must be suppressed. Neither is it allowed to publish reports of attempted murder of princes or riots in other countries. The editor is instructed to give preference to all news regarding the health of the emperor and his family, the condition of agriculture and the progress of industry and commerce.

AT last the Grant monument fund of $500,000 is completed, with $700 to spare. It is nearly seven years since the first contributions were made, and up to two months ago little progress had been made. Then Gen. Horace Porter took the matter in hand and announced his determination to complete the monument without delay. Memorial day was set as the date for completing the fund, and the last dollar was obtained within twenty-four hours of that time. New York city and the whole country are to be congratulated on the fact that at last the grave of the great leader will be fittingly marked.

LATER NEWS.

Dropped a Shell.

VALLEJO, Cal., June 13.—A report which shook the town like a sharp shock of earthquake was heard at 11:30 o'clock this morning, and it was followed by the ringing of alarm bells at Mare Island navy yard. When the great volume of smoke at the yard cleared away, it was found that an explosion had taken place at the shell house of the naval magazine. The burned and charred bodies of two apprentices were found on the beach 20 yards from the scene of the explosion. A third body, that of a German, was at the same time on the way to the hospital. In the midst of the ruins and all around the sidehills were seen the bodies and remains of bodies scattered here and there.

When collected together the dead numbered twelve, with Gunner Hittinger, of the cruiser Boston, at the head. The bodies were greatly disfigured, some being cut in two, and nearly all minus a limb. Three wounded men were taken to the hospital in a dying condition.

No one seems able to tell exactly how the explosion occurred. A working party of fifteen men from the United States steamship Boston, which was in the stone dock near by, had been sent down to prepare ammunition and fill a shell for the ship. All were at work in the filling room of the magazine under charge of Gunner Hittinger. It is supposed that one of the party dropped a shell and the concussion caused the explosion.

NAMED A TICKET.

President Harrison Renominated at Minneapolis.

Only One Ballot Required to Reach the Result—Whitelaw Reid Chosen as the Candidate for Vice President.

FOURTH DAY.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 11.—In the republican convention, when the routine business had been cleared up, Chairman McKinley impressively announced that the next order of business was the presentation of names of nomination for president. A mighty cheer went up from the convention. The chair ordered the roll called.

When Colorado was reached Senator Wolcott arose and nominated James G. Blaine.

The dramatic presentation of the name of Blaine, so unexpected, so decisive, took the convention by surprise. There was dead silence for a moment. Then the Blaine men broke loose and for three minutes the hall rang with their cheers renewed again and again. They stood up, waving hats and handkerchiefs and fans.

Again the Blaine men were on their feet cheering and waving flags, handkerchiefs and even umbrellas. Some one in the galleries began the cry of "Blaine, Blaine, James G. Blaine," but the chairman rapped for order and the roll call proceeded slowly.

Indiana called Col. Dick Thompson to take the platform to present Harrison. The cheering was deafening when Mr. Thompson said that he proposed to present a man who does not seek success by detraction of any other great republican. Said he: "I nominate for president Benjamin Harrison." The cheering for Harrison was more general and prolonged than that for Blaine.

The counter demonstration of the Harrison men came with enthusiasm. Fans and umbrellas were in the air, delegates stood on their seats and Fred Douglass, waving his white hat on top of his cane, led the cheering that was sustained for two minutes or more. The chairman sat down until the tumult subsided. Then he ordered the roll call continued.

When Michigan was reached some one in the galleries cried out: "What's the matter with Alger?" but there was only a slight laugh from the convention. Then Minnesota was called and W. H. Eustis took the platform to second the nomination of Blaine.

The convention did not greet Mr. Eustis' remarks with any enthusiasm when they were delivered. But when they were concluded an incident occurred which sent the convention off into the greatest tumult that it had yet known. The cheering and demonstration continued for twenty-five minutes, ladies waving their parasols, fans and hankerchiefs, and men cheering wildly, tossing hats and waving banners.

When New York was called Mr. Depew came forward and nominated Benjamin Harrison. The scene that ensued cannot be described. The tumultuous cheers, wild waving of handkerchiefs, hats and banners, combined to present a sight which could not be witnessed elsewhere than in a great American political convention.

At the conclusion of the call of states ex-Gov. Sewell, of New Jersey, moved that the convention proceed to ballot. Amid great applause the motion prevailed and a period of intense suspense followed, as the chairmen of the delegations of the various states proceeded to poll their delegations preparatory to responding to the roll-call which would follow.

It was ordered that the delegates from Indian territory and Alaska, who had been seated, be also entitled to vote upon the presidential ballot.

Alabama was the first state called, and when it responded with 15 votes for Harrison and 7 for William McKinley, Jr., a deafening cheer greeted the entrance of the distinguished Ohio governor into the presidential contest.

When the state of Ohio was reached occurred the most dramatic incident ever witnessed in a national convention, that of a presidential candidate challenging the liberality of the vote cast for him by his own state. "Ohio gives 1 votes for Benjamin Harrison and 44 votes for William McKinley," said ex-Gov. Foraker, and the pandemonium of enthusiasm that greeted the announcement showed that

JACOB WHITELAW REID.

President Harrison had lost 27 votes in the state of Ohio. "All enthusiasm must have an end, however, and when the shouting delegates were hoarse and tired, McKinley, who had been sitting silent and with a visage as immovable as the sphinx, arose and in a clear voice, which penetrated to every corner of the vast hall, said: "I challenge the vote of the state of Ohio. I am a delegate from that state."

There was a breathless pause, but the fiery Foraker was on his feet, and, waving his hand deprecatingly at the chairman, said: "But you have been retired from this delegation, Mr. Chairman, by your election to the chairmanship of this convention, and your alternate has taken your place and we no longer know you as a member of the Ohio delegation."

This generous action of the ex-governor toward a man who but recently had been identified with an opposition faction in the state of Ohio evoked all the better impulses of the vast audience, and the Harrison as well as Blaine and McKinley delegates found themselves cheering the generosity of the chairman of the Ohio delegation.

"The chair overrules the point of order," said McKinley to Foraker, "and asks the secretary of the convention to call the roll."

Another ovation fell to the lot of the governor of Ohio, this time, however, from the Harrison delegates in admiration of his loyal support of the president.

There was a still noise throughout the hall as the secretary of the convention calmly turned the leaves until the roll of the Ohio delegation was reached and called the first name on the list, that of William McKinley, Jr. "I vote for Benjamin Harrison," said the great American protectionist, and the cheers that resounded through the hall were quieted only when the object of all this enthusiasm waved his gavel deprecatingly to restore order.

"Joseph B. Foraker," shouted the clerk, and there was a breathless pause.

"William McKinley, Jr.," said the ex-governor, and this time it was the fiery Foraker who, for his loyalty to the governor of his state, deserved the plaudits of the multitude. Name after name was called and when the end of the roll was reached it gave 1 vote to Benjamin Harrison and 45 votes for William McKinley, Jr., a loss of one to the president by reason of the polling of the delegation. One of the Harrison delegates had reconsidered and voted for McKinley, and the governor's alternate, it was discovered, had on the first ballot actually voted for Harrison in obedience to the previous request of McKinley, although the latter doubtless supposed he had disobeyed this injunction and voted for his chief.

When, as the balloting proceeded, it was apparent that the president would certainly be renominated, the scene of enthusiasm displayed by his followers was unrivaled by any incident of the day. Cheer after cheer was given until men were fairly falling with exhaustion on every side, and when the voices were stilled the stamping of feet and the rapping of canes on the floor, the throwing of hats and umbrellas and handkerchiefs in the air and the waving of flags and banners only added to the pandemonium of the scene.

The roll-call continued, and of course from this time on showed steady and significant gains for Harrison. At the end it was obvious that he was nominated by a considerable majority, but it required the clerks a long time to foot up the result.

"The clerks will announce the result of the roll-call," said Chairman McKinley half an hour later, he having resumed the chair in the interval.

"The whole number of votes," said the clerk, "is 904½. The number necessary to a choice is 453. [Applause.] Benjamin Harrison receives 535 1-6 votes. [Prolonged applause.] James G. Blaine receives 181 5-6. [Applause.] William McKinley receives 182. [Cheers.] Robert Lincoln 1 vote and Thomas B. Reed 1 vote." [Applause.]

"Benjamin Harrison, having received a majority of all the votes cast," said Chairman McKinley, "is the nominee of this convention. Shall that nomination be made unanimous?" [Great applause and cheers and cries of "Yes, yes, let us make it unanimous."]

"All in favor of making it unanimous say aye," said the chairman. There was a storm of ayes. Chairman McKinley never put the negative. "It is unanimous," said he at 4:36 p. m., and once more the convention gave itself over to one of those scenes of enthusiasm which had become so familiar to the proceedings of the day. The result of the ballot is given in the following table:

A delegate moved to adjourn until 8 o'clock p. m., and, although there was a disposition to finish up the work at once, the motion prevailed and the convention adjourned until that hour.

At the evening session, Senator O'Connor, of New York, presented the name of Jacob Whitelaw Reid as a candidate for the vice presidency, and was followed by Gen. Horace Porter, who eloquently seconded the nomination, as did Gov. Bulkely, of Conecticut.

Mr. Settle, of Tennessee, placed in nomination Thomas B. Reed, of Maine. Mr. C. M. Louthan, of Virginia, took the platform and seconded the nomination of Thomas B. Reed. Upon the statement from the Maine delegation that Mr. Reed would not accept the nomination, his name was withdrawn.

The yeas and nays being taken Whitelaw Reid was declared nominated by acclamation.

The announcement of the nomination of Mr. Reid was the occasion of demonstrations of enthusiasm on the part of both delegates and audience.

A long list of names were announced as members of the committees to notify the nominees for president and vice president of the United States. The convention then adjourned sine die.

Benjamin Harrison was born in Hamilton county, O., August 20, 1833. He was graduated at the Oxford (O.) university and studied law for two years in Cincinnati. In 1854 he went to Indianapolis, which city he has since made his home. Mr. Harrison was elected reporter of the supreme court of Indiana in 1860, six years after he had begun the practice of his profession. Soon after this, however, he joined the union army, in which he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was one of the 75,000 volunteers who answered President Lincoln's call. After a short service he organized Company A of the Seventieth Indiana volunteer infantry and appointed colonel. He was mustered out in June, 1865, with the rank of brigadier general. Returning to civil life he discharged the duties of court reporter for four years. In 1876 he was a candidate for governor on the republican side, but was defeated. He was appointed on the Mississippi river commission in 1879. Mr. Harrison was elected United States senator for Indiana in 1880 as the successor of Joseph E. McDonald and took his seat on March 4, 1881. His term of service expired March 3, 1887. In 1888 he was nominated by the republicans for the presidency and was elected over Grover Cleveland, who was renominated by the democrats.

Jacob Whitelaw Reid, republican nominee for vice president, is editor in chief and one of the proprietors of the New York Tribune. He was born in Xenia, O., in October, 1837. His parents gave him a good education. At 15 he entered the Miami university at Oxford, Butler county, O., where he was graduated in 1856. He began the active duties of life as principal of the graded schools in South Charleston, Clark county, in the same state, but did not continue in this occupation long. In 1857 he bought the Xenia News and did such good work on that journal as to give it a reputation wide as the state. This led to his engagement by the Times and Gazette of Cincinnati and the Herald of Cleveland as their Columbus correspondent. The war gave him an opportunity of distinguishing himself as a correspondent at the front. He served the Cincinnati Gazette in this capacity, and in 1862 became a stockholder of that journal, the publication of which he subsequently assisted in the capacity of associate editor. His connection with the New York Tribune began with his being the editor in charge of its Washington bureau. He ventured upon the publication of a volume in the year 1865. It was entitled "After the War—A Southern Tour," and recorded observations made in company with Chief Justice Chase on an extensive range of travel. Reid published another book in 1868, "Ohio in the War," a work of considerable length and value. He became permanently an editor on the staff of the Tribune in 1870, and when Horace Greeley was a candidate for the presidency assumed the position of managing editor. Mr. Reid is a wealthy man. He married the daughter of D. O. Mills, many times a millionaire, and lives in fine style in an aristocratic up town district in New York. President Harrison appointed Mr. Reid minister to France, and he has proved a successful and exceedingly popular diplomate.

VANDERBILT'S YACHT.

It Crashes Into a Boat Containing Two Persons and Both Are Drowned.

NEW YORK, June 13.—William K. Vanderbilt's beautiful yacht, the Alva, steaming rapidly down North river Saturday afternoon with Mr. Vanderbilt and several gentlemen aboard, ran her sharp bow into a rowboat in which were a young French saloonkeeper, Nicholas Michels, and a woman named Mary Simonin. The boat was cut in two and the occupants were thrown in the water to drown, after struggling for about two minutes. The boat was cut clean in two. The Alva finally hove to. There was a rush of small craft for the spot. The woman's skirts became waterlogged and she went down, her voice ringing sharp and clear until the water covered her head. The man held out a few seconds longer and then he too went out of sight. Ten seconds after they disappeared half a dozen rowboats shot over the spot with men eager for rescue, but Michels and Miss Simonin had gone to the bottom and were not seen again. The yacht Alva, after stopping a moment, went on her way. It is said she was going too fast for the crowded river.

THEIR PRINCIPLES.

The Platform Adopted by the Republican Convention.

Its Declarations on Protection, Bimetallism, Elections, Opposition to Trusts, and on Many Topics of a Miscellaneous Nature.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 10.—Following is the complete text of the platform adopted by the committee for submission to the convention:

The representatives of the republicans of the United States assembled in general convention on the shores of the Mississippi river, the everlasting bond of an indestructible republic, whose most glorious chapter of history is the record of the republican party, congratulate their countrymen on the majestic march of the nation under the banners inscribed with the principles of our platform of 1888, vindicated by victory at the polls and prosperity in our fields, workshops and mines, and make the following declaration of principles:

We reaffirm the American doctrine of protection. We call attention to its growth abroad. We maintain that the prosperous condition of our country is largely due to the wise revenue legislation of the republican congress.

We believe that all articles which cannot be produced in the United States, except luxuries, should be admitted free of duty, and that on all imports coming in competition with the products of American labor there should be levied duties equal to the difference between wages abroad and at home.

We assert that the prices of manufactured articles of general consumption have been reduced under the operations of the tariff act of 1890.

We denounce the efforts of the democratic majority of the house of representatives to destroy our tariff laws by piecemeal, as is manifested by their attacks upon wool, lead and lead ores, the chief products of a number of states, and we ask the people for their judgment thereon.

We point to the success of the republican policy of reciprocity, under which our export trade has vastly increased, and new and enlarged markets have been opened for the products of our farms and workshops. We remind the people of the bitter opposition of the democratic party to this practical business measure, and claim that, executed by a republican administration, our present laws will eventually give us control of the trade of the world.

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the government shall be as good as any other.

We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our government to secure an international conference to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

We demand that every citizen of the United States shall be allowed to cast one free and unrestricted ballot in all public elections, and that such ballot shall be counted and returned as cast; that such laws shall be enacted and enforced as will secure to every citizen, be he rich or poor, native or foreign born, white or black, this sovereign right guaranteed by the constitution. The free and honest popular ballot, the just and equal representation of all the people, as well as their just and equal protection under the laws, are the foundation of our republican institutions, and the party will never relax its efforts until the integrity of the ballot and the purity of elections shall be fully guaranteed and protected in every state.

We denounce the continued inhuman outrages perpetrated upon American citizens for political reasons in certain southern states of the union.

We favor the extension of our foreign commerce, the restoration of our merchant marine by home-built ships and the creation of a navy for the protection of our national interests and the honor of our flag; the maintenance of the most friendly relations with all foreign powers, entangling alliances with none; and the protection of the rights of our fishermen.

We reaffirm our approval of the Monroe doctrine and believe in the achievement of the manifest destiny of the republic in its broadest sense.

We favor the enactment of more stringent laws and relations for the restriction of criminal, pauper and contract immigration.

We favor efficient legislation by congress to protect the life and limb of employes of transportation companies engaged in carrying on inter-state commerce, and recommend legislation by the respective states that will protect employes engaged in state commerce, in mining and in manufacturing.

The republican party has always been the champion of the oppressed and recognizes the dignity of manhood, irrespective of faith, color or nationality; it sympathizes with the cause of home rule in Ireland, and protests against the prosecution of the Jews in Russia.

The ultimate reliance of free popular government is the intelligence of the people and the maintenance of freedom among men. We therefore declare anew our devotion to liberty of thought and conscience, of speech and press, and approve all agencies and instrumentalities which contribute to the education of the children of the land, but while insisting upon the fullest measure of religious liberty we are opposed to any union of church and state.

We reaffirm our opposition declared in the republican platform of 1888 to all combinations of capital, organized in trusts or otherwise, to control arbitrarily the condition of trade among our citizens. We heartily indorse the action already taken upon this subject and ask for such further legislation as may be required to remedy any defects in existing laws and to render their enforcement more complete and effective.

We approve the policy of extending to towns, villages and rural communities the advantages of the free delivery service now enjoyed by the larger cities of the country, and reaffirm the declaration contained in the republican platform of 1888, pledging the reduction of letter postage to one cent at the earliest possible moment consistent with the maintenance of the post office department and the highest class of postal service.

Civil Service—We commend the spirit and evidence of reform in the civil service and the wise and consistent enforcement by the republican party of the laws regulating the same.

Nicaragua Canal—The construction of the Nicaragua canal is of the highest importance to the American people, but as a measure of national defense and to build up and maintain American commerce it should be controlled by the United States government.

Territories—We favor the admission of the remaining territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the territories and of the United States. All the federal officers appointed for the territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

Arid Lands—We favor cession, subject to the homestead laws, of the arid public lands to the states and territories in which they lie, under such congressional restrictions as to disposition, reclamation and occupancy by settlers as will secure the maximum benefits to the people.

The Columbian Exposition—The World's Columbian exposition is a great national undertaking, and congress should promptly enact such reasonable legislation in aid thereof as will insure a discharging of the expense and obligations incident thereto, and the attainment of results commensurate with the dignity and progress of the nation.

Intemperance—We sympathize with all wise and legitimate efforts to lessen and prevent the evils of intemperance and promote morality.

Pensions—Ever mindful of the services and sacrifices of the men who saved the life of the nation, we pledge anew to the veteran soldiers of the republic a watchful care and recognition of their just claims upon a grateful people.

Harrison's Administration—We commend the able, patriotic and thoroughly American administration of President Harrison. Under it the country has enjoyed remarkable prosperity and the dignity and honor of the nation, at home and abroad, have been faithfully maintained, and we offer the record of pledges kept as a guarantee of faithful performance in the future.

HE DIDN'T PROPOSE.

An Angry Mamma Strikes Her Daughter's Suitor With a Fire Shovel.

A clerk in one of the city banks bought a splendid cut-glass bottle of cologne, with a glass stopper and pink ribbon, to present to a young lady he is keeping company with; but on reaching the house he felt a little embarrassed for fear there were members of the family present, and so left the beautiful gift in the hat stand drawer and passed in. The movement was perceived by a graceless brother of the young lady, who appropriated the cologne for his own use, and refilled the bottle with hartshorn, and then hung about to observe the result.

In a little while the young man slipped out to the secret depository, and, securing the splendid gift, slipped back again into the parlor, where, with a few appropriate words, he pressed it upon the blushing girl. Like the good and faithful daughter that she was, she at once hurried into the presence of her mother, and the old lady was charmed.

She drew out the stopper, laid her nostrils over the aperture, and fetched a pull at the contents that fairly made them bubble. Then she laid the bottle down, and picking up a brass-mounted fire shovel instead, said, as soon as she could say anything—

"Where is that miserable wretch?"

He, all unconscious of what had happened, was in front of the mirror adjusting his necktie and smiling at himself. Here she found him, and said to him:

"Oh, you are laughing at the trick you played on an old woman, are you?"

And then she gave him

EVENING.

Dim falls the light o'er all the dreaming woods;
Athwart the distant western sky are gleams
Of gold and amber; pearly rose-edged clouds,
Looking so passing fair, one almost dreams

The opening gate of Paradise hath lent
Some tinge of glory to the dying day;
And earth-bound souls, with longing, ling'ring gaze,
Would fain rise up and move along that way.

A stillness sweet and solemn all around;
The song of birds is hushed; there falls no quiver
Of rustling leaf, or shaken trembling reed,
Upon the fair faint brightness of the river.

The crescent moon gleams coldly, dimly, forth;
And in the deep'ning blue of heaven, afar,
A tender watcher o'er the troubled world,
Shineth one solitary glitt'ring star.

The shadows deepen on the distant hills;
The highest peaks but touched with ling'ring light;
And down their purpling sides, soft misty clouds
Wrap all the valleys in a dusky night.

And far away the murmur of the sea,
And moonlit waves breaking in foamy line.
So Night—God's angel, Night—with silvery wings,
Fills all the earth with loveliness divine.

AMONG THE DAKOTAS.

A Woman's Unique Experiences with Indians.

Habits and Customs of the Copper-Colored Children of the Plains—Their Weakness for Stewed Dog—A Farewell Dance.

In our residence of fourteen months among the Dakota Indians, whom we had been taught to look on as altogether barbarous, my sister and I had unique experiences in finding that some things about us shocked their ideas of the fitness of things as much as their customs did ours. We thought a faded calico bag good enough to send over the prairies for our mail, and every ten days our two camp policemen carried that bag to and from the agency. One day one of the huge fellows said with a serious face that we should have a pretty bag, and he turned to his fellow policeman to ask if that was not so. The other man nodded his head with such vigor that it was plain the matter had been a subject of mortification to both, and that they had consulted how to bring the grievance to our notice without hurting our feelings. The Dakotas dislike much to say anything not altogether complimentary, and we knew the effort it must have cost to express themselves on this subject. We made a smart bag of red flannel, picked out in black. When Cut-Foot strapped it across his shoulders over his tidy uniform, he was genuinely happy.

Large bustles were worn among civilized people when we went among the Dakotas, but we had to abandon them. We would have had no influence over our charges if we had kept those bustles on.

The dogs eaten by these people are quite different from the dogs of which they, like civilized peoples, make friends and companions. They have square, box-like bodies and heads, and scarcely any tails. They seem to fatten as readily as pigs. A small tepee near the family tepee is put up for the dog family. The flesh of these dogs is looked on as a dainty, and is eaten with ceremony, and the women bring little tin cups to take some of it to the children at home. For one of the weekly dances in camp, one dog is considered sufficient, but as many as forty are killed for a great feast. The odor of the stewed dog is very unpleasant and we had to throw open the windows, even in severe weather, after the school-children had been regaled on that dish. The Indian school at the agency was kept by the agent's pretty daughter. She had often observed one of these dogs that seemed to have more sagacity than his fellows. He came every day to school with the child who owned him, and during the exercises he sat beside her on the platform and joined with the children in the games at recess. She said to the dog's master one day: "Your dog is very fat." "Yes," was the boy's answer; "we will eat him next week."

One day there was a knock at our camp schoolhouse door. One of the children, little Amos Black-bull had brought his dog, one of the edible variety, as a present to us, and had tied him to the step. Of course Amos was thanked, but his present was not accepted.

The Indian children, like white children, imitate life in their play. The girls carry their dolls on their backs, secured by the shawl—for the smallest maid likes a little shawl round her shoulders, or thrown over her head. When the dolly is supposed to be fretful, the small mother shakes herself from side to side, as she has seen her mother do to hush a real baby. Their doll houses are tepees, constructed of an old rag, held down against the force of the wind, like the family tepee, by turf laid round the edge. Besides this, the dolls have what is known as a root-house in that severe climate. It is a hole dug in the side of a hill, with a projecting roof of turf, in which are stored such provisions as would be spoiled by freezing.

The Indian babies were alarmed by our white faces when first we went among them, and the mothers were mortified by their screams. But with the assistance of a spoonful of sugar or a bit of hardtack, which they like as much as white children do candy, we were soon on good terms.

The Dakotas, unless they have been corrupted by bad white men, are strictly and literally truthful. One has to be careful not to make a mistake in talking with them. When they asked how many "sleeps" (nights) before we meant to do any certain thing, we had to be sure of the number for fear of shocking them by not keeping our word. One is not allowed to change one's mind about engagements, either. On one occasion we had gone the rounds of the camp inviting all, old and young, to a sort of entertainment—a reception we called it, for want of another name. On the day appointed I was seized with a fever, and my sister decided that we would have to postpone our treat. So she sounded the police signal, three taps on the bell, and sent our faithful Stiff-Arm to let the camp know that no one was to come to the school-house that day. But she reckoned without her invited guests. Indians are punctuality itself, and promptly at four o'clock, the hour set, they began to pour in. The first comers were allowed to come into my bedroom, that they might report my illness to those on the way. But it did no good. The entire camp arrived. My sister rushed for the hardtack that we had meant to be part of the refreshments, and distributed it among them at the door and bade them good-by. Then they went reluctantly home.

For the closing exercises of the school, we invited all the camp to come at ten o'clock in the morning. Before our seven-o'clock breakfast, we saw a wagon drive up filled with parents and children. We gave them pictures to look at, and they were so entertained by these and by our running about in our preparations for the occasion that I do not think they were sorry to wait three hours before the entertainment proper began.

Our wards became so affectionate that we had to forbid their coming to the house before breakfast. If they stayed too long, it was no insult to say, in the idiom of their language, that we wished to "make the door solid," which meant that we wished to shut the door behind them. The same visitor would be smiling at the door the next day waiting for admission. It is a grief and mortification to the Dakotas if a teacher leaves their camp. When we found that the climate was too severe for us and decided to leave, they expressed their sorrow in many pathetic ways. They came singly and in number to say that their hearts were very sad. The chief men in the camp came to the schoolhouse and held a solemn council, sitting silent for about an hour and a half. Then one or two said their hearts were sad, and all went away.

They gave us a farewell Omaha dance. This is one of their friendly dances. A good many young braves were invited from a neighboring camp to make it a very smart ball indeed. With the exception of a bit of blanket or calico, they wore no clothes except their feather dresses, necklaces, armlets, and ornaments for the scalplock and the ankles. Their faces and bodies were painted fantastically. We scarcely recognized familiar friends. It was a good deal like a masquerade. Our dignified policemen, Little-Dog and Stiff-Arm and Cut-Foot, whom we had been accustomed to see in the United States army uniform, were particularly amazing in our eyes. They gave us chairs, and once or twice during the progress of the dance asked us to rise that our seats might be placed where we could be still more comfortable. All the Indian women and all the men, except those who beat the drums, sat on the ground or on a plank laid on the ground. The women danced apart from the men. Neither sex paid the least attention to the other, apparently.

The biggest yellow dog in the camp had been killed to do honor to the teachers. He was stewed in a clothes boiler, and the dish was placed in the middle of the hut. The other refreshments were rice, bread and coffee, each in a separate clothes boiler. The government gives clothes boilers to the Indians along with stoves. These stoves constitute a part of the annuity goods promised to the Sioux or Dakotas in the treaty when they ceded their lands to the United States. When the time came for the refreshments to be served, the young man who got up the dance was conducted by the master of ceremonies to the middle of the room, and placed beside the clothes boiler of stewed dog. Then Eagle-Dog, who had contributed the big yellow dog, was led up and placed beside him. Then the master of ceremonies turned his footsteps towards me.

It was a trying moment. I devoutly trusted that it was not de rigueur that their head teacher should sit on the ground and eat stewed dog! They must have held a conference and decided that my sister and I were not to be asked to do this. When he reached me, he did not offer to conduct me to the center like the other honored ones. He stooped low and put his head with its huge circle of eagle feathers to my side and rolled it round and round. I stole a furtive glance round to see what the meaning could be. The whole roomful of perhaps a hundred and fifty Indians were looking calmly on; it was plain that it was "the correct thing." The brave held his head up for a moment, and I thought that was the end of the ceremony, but it had to be gone through with a second time. Then he stepped away, and began to serve out the feast. Thanks were offered up audibly by each one present both before and after the supper.—Susan Dabney Smedes, in N. Y. Post.

GAVE UP THE PISTOL.

The Reason He Discarded His Defensive Weapon.

"I used to carry a revolver," said the man who gets home late at night. "One evening a man tried to 'hold me up' and when I drew my pistol asked him what I could do for him and he turned and ran like a deer. I congratulated myself on being so wise as to carry a weapon for self defense. But I found that my experience was the very worst thing which could have happened to me. Whenever a man appeared suddenly in a dark street late at night I fancied he was a footpad and could hardly restrain myself from reaching for my revolver. Then two things came into my life which made me determine that I would rather run the danger of being robbed than of killing a man.

"I was telling a friend one evening how when I was startled in this way my impulse was to shoot. He had a story for me then. It was about a marshal out in Utah when United States officers were considered the mortal enemy of the Mormon church. This man had been forced to do a great deal of dangerous and disagreeable work, and he felt that he carried his life in his hands. He was walking down an unfrequented street one night, as usual on his guard. He had just passed a tree when his quick ear caught a sound behind him. Wheeling like a flash he saw a man step out from behind a tree. Something was in the man's hand, the marshal could not see what. With one movement of his arm he drew his revolver and fired, killing the man in the shadows instantly. The man proved to be a harmless old cripple.

"Now the possibility of my committing a terrible mistake like this worried me into a condition of extreme nervousness. And yet because I was so nervous I could not bring myself to give up my revolver.

"One night when I was going home—I live in the outskirts of Brooklyn—I had just reached the corner of my grounds when a man came bounding over the fence and landed directly in front of me. I drew my revolver and I am sure that I should have shot him if I had not heard my brother's voice cry out sharply: 'For God's sake, Will, what are you doing?'

"One of my babies was ill, and he had been running across our grounds for a doctor. I have never carried a pistol since that night, and I have never since been afraid of highwaymen."—N. Y. Tribune.

BOLD MINERS.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 13.—The boldest robbery ever committed in this vicinity occurred Saturday morning across the bay in Oakland, when two men in a crowded car were robbed of $16,000 in coin, which they were taking to the Judson iron works to pay off 400 workmen.

The coin was in the possession of Secretary Gilson and Bookkeeper Mortensen, of the company, who started with it from San Francisco on the 11 o'clock boat. They occupied a seat in a car on the Berkeley train next to the baggage car. As the train showed up at B street two men entered the front door, walked down the aisle, stopped suddenly before Gilson and Mortensen, and presented pistols and demanded the money bags. "Hold up your hands," was the order, and Gilson and Mortensen had no option but to obey. "Now hand over that money," continued the leader.

Gilson surrendered the bag of silver (there were two, one containing $1,000 in silver and the other $15,000 in gold), dropping the other between the seats, hoping to elude the vigilance of the robber.

"None of that," said the robber, cocking his revolver, "Hand over the other bag," and Gilson passed it up.

Gilson and Mortensen had thrown over a seat in front of them and laid the sacks containing the coin on a seat before them. The two men occupied one seat and the coin was perhaps 2 feet from them. Gilson was reading a newspaper and was taken completely by surprise! Simultaneously with the demand for the coin the train started, and the two robbers backed out of the car with the money, covering Gilson and Mortensen with their pistols as they escaped.

Pandemonium immediately reigned in the car. Everyone seemed to lose his head. It was so sudden that the thirty or more passengers in the car had hardly realized what had taken place before the robbers were in possession of the money and were making their escape. Any attempt to recover the money at the time would have been fatal for the robbers were shrewd enough to keep the passengers covered with their revolvers until they reached the car door.

Gilson went out on the platform and emptied his revolver at the fleeing robbers. One passenger said that the smaller of the robbers staggered after the firing, but this part of the story was unconfirmed. The robbers had provided themselves with a horse and buggy with which to escape, and they drove rapidly away.

The police think they have a clew to the robbers, and have offered a reward of $1,000 for the capture of J. G. Smith and Joe Dunn, formerly employes of the Judson company, but who left some time ago of their own accord. The police refuse to give their reasons for suspecting these men. The robbers have been traced to the foothills of Mount Diablo, 15 miles from Oakland, where it is thought they buried the money, and one remained there to guard the treasure while the others returned to Oakland with the horse and buggy. Another man suspected is a discharged employe named Girard, who is also known as Frank Queen, an ex-criminal.

HELPING THE DESTITUTE.

Work of the Relief Committee in the Ill-Fated City of Titusville.

OIL CITY, Pa., June 13.—The fifty-fourth body was found here Sunday. This completes Oil City's dead, all of the missing having now been found or accounted for.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 13.—The following is given out officially to the public:

"The prompt and generous assistance given to our afflicted citizens in their recent calamity by the people in all parts of the country is most gratefully appreciated by the sufferers and all residents of Titusville. It is due to the public that we make a statement of our condition as exactly and accurately as is possible six days after the calamity. We have our relief committee thoroughly organized and the distribution of food, clothing, bedding and other supplies is progressing with system. Perfect order prevails. Large forces of laborers are employed in removing wreckage from the streets and in clearing up the ruins of houses.

"Fifty-nine bodies have been buried. Several persons are still missing. We do not need clothing, food or other supplies. Our need is for money to relieve those who have lost by fire and flood and to repair the enormous destruction of property. The district devastated by fire and flood extends through the entire length of the city for about one mile and a half. Its breadth is from one-eighth to one-fourth of a mile. The estimated loss of property exceeds $1,000,000. The losses fall chiefly upon the poor and laboring people.

"Within the bounds named were more than one hundred and fifty dwellings as well as many shops, manufactories and oil refineries where labor was employed. The loss of personal property in the homes of the people was almost total, while very many lost not only their houses and contents but the ground on which they stood. The streets are many of them destroyed and the loss in this particular and in bridges is very large. Everything possible is being done to alleviate distress and our people are recovering hope and spirit.

"E. O. EMERSON, Mayor."

A Theater Burned.

GRAND RAPINDS, Mich., June 13.—Powers' opera house, the leading theater in western Michigan was gutted by fire Saturday afternoon, causing a loss of $60,000. The fire originated under the stage. Ed Warrington, the stage carpenter, unawares that the meter had been removed for repairs, entered the meter closet with a lighted match and turned the gas on. There was an explosion and in an instant the flames burned through the floor and enveloped the entire interior.

Pardoned a Pennsylvania Preacher.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 13.—Governor Pattison has pardoned Rev. Clark M. Eggleston, the Methodist minister of Pittsburgh who was convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Granite State Provident Insurance association of New York, and sentenced to two years in the western penitentiary Feb. 28, 1892.

Farm Laborers Scarce.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Latest advices from the Argentine Republic tate that wages are again going up in he colonies owing to the great scarcity of farm laborers.

Damage by Hail.

DONIPHAN, Neb., June 13.—A terrific hailstorm struck this vicinity at 6 o'clock Sunday evening, destroying all fruit and growing crops in its track and breaking every window in town exposed to the fury of the storm. Hail fell as large as hens' eggs and banked up in some places to a depth of 2 feet.

Stewart for President.

OMAHA, Neb., June 13. — People's party leaders declare that they would be pleased with the nomination of Senator Stewart, of Nevada, and Representative Watson, of Georgia, for president and vice president.

PRESIDENT POLK DEAD.

The Well-Known Alliance Leader Passes Away in Washington and Is Buried in Raleigh, N. C.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Col. L. L. Polk, president of the Farmers' Alliance, died at Garfield hospital Saturday. The death of President Polk smashes the carefully laid plans of the alliance. They were to nominate him for president at the Omaha convention July 4, according to Dunning, editor of the third party organ. The ticket will now in all probability be Weaver and Watson, the former from Iowa and the latter from Georgia.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 13.—The train bearing the body of President Polk did not arrive here until 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. It was met at the depot by hundreds of people. The procession was formed and the body was escorted to the First Baptist church, of which Mr. Polk was a communicant. By 4 o'clock the church was packed, the audience numbering at least 1,000. After the services, which were very impressive, the remains were escorted to Oakwood cemetery, where they were interred.

Leonidas Polk was born in Anson county, N. C., in April, 1837, was brought up on a farm. He was elected to the lower house of the North Carolina general assembly in 1860; entered the confederate army in 1861 and served with distinction during the war. He was again elected to the North Carolina general assembly in 1865, and soon after was elected as a delegate to the constitutional convention of North Carolina. In 1877 he was appointed commissioner of agriculture. He began the publication of the Progressive Farmer in 1886 and commenced organizing farmers' clubs in his state. In 1887 he joined the Farmers' Alliance and was elected secretary of the Farmers' Alliance of North Carolina at its first organization, which position he continued to hold until his death. He was elected first vice president of the National Farmers' Alliance Co-Operative union of America in 1887 and was re-elected in 1888. At the national convention held at St. Louis December 3, 1889, he was elected president of the National Farmers' Alliance Industrial union, which office he filled up to the time of his death.

CAN'T TOUCH THE TRUSTS.

Judges Say Congress and the Legislatures Must Keep Hands Off.

CINCINNATI, June 13.—Mr. H. L. Greene, of the whisky trust, was before Judges Jackson and Ricks, of the United States circuit court, Saturday to answer for refusing to give bond to appear in Boston to respond to an indictment found against him in that city for violation of the United States anti-trust law. The court claimed, on reading the indictments, that none of the counts constituted a violation of any law of the United States. Mr. Greene was accordingly released from the requirement to give a bond. Upon the return of District Attorney John W. Herron to the city the government will ask for bench warrants to remove all the indicted persons to Boston. This will be resisted if necessary by habeas corpus proceedings. Judge Jackson gave as the grounds of his decision, or rather in a general review of the anti-trust law, an opinion that, aside from the futility of the indictment of Mr. Greene, the application of the law in this case would be to apply an ex post facto law inasmuch as the trust was formed before the law was enacted. The trust seemed, moreover, to him not to be a monopoly, for it did not prevent other similar trusts being formed, and congress had no right to forbid business combinations for mutual profit. The judge held, in effect, that neither congress nor the states has any power to regulate trusts.

NEW WORLD'S FAIR BILL.

Substitute Prepared by the Sub-Committee of the House.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—A sub-committee of the world's fair committee of the house has prepared a substitute bill for that now before the committee, providing for government aid to the exposition. The substitute proposes that 10,000,000 silver souvenir half dollars be coined from the uncurrent subsidiary silver coins now in the treasury to aid in defraying the cost of completing the work at Chicago. The sum of $600,000 is appropriated to reimburse the treasury for loss on such recoinage. Out of the net amount received into the treasury of the exposition the government is to receive thereof such proportion as this appropriation bears to the whole amount expended.

Provision is made for the preparation of 50,000 bronze medals and necessary dies therefor, with appropriate devices commemorative of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, and for 50,000 vellum impressions and diplomas, the medals and diplomas to be awarded to exhibitors at the exposition. The bill will be laid before the full committee next week.

Floods in Cuba.

HAVANA, June 13.—A dispatch from Matansas states the Yumuri and San Juan rivers are greatly swollen. The civil guards and troops are aiding so far as possible the people whose houses have been flooded. In several houses the water is 10 feet deep. The warehouses are inundated and thousands of bags of sugar have been lost. Many small vessels in the harbor were wrecked during the storm. A number of bridges, including those at Bailer and San Luis, have been destroyed. The telephone poles are down. Four persons lost their lives in the floods.

RACINE, Wis., June 13.—Horatio B. Munroe, cashier of the First national bank, died suddenly about 6 o'clock Saturday night at his home on Main street, of heart disease. He left the bank at 4 o'clock and went to his home and proceeded to work in the garden. Shortly after his wife went into the garden and found him on the ground dead.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 13.—The Journal publishes a letter from Albert G. Porter, minister to Rome, declining to accept the nomination for governor. The letter is dated Rome, May 26.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Doughnuts: One egg, one cup of sour milk, a little salt, one cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda. Mix as soft as consistent with handling and fry in hot lard.—N. Y. World.

—Common sulphur will kill or drive away the little fish-shaped, silvery pest which infests our pantry. Sprinkle the sulphur freely about, and the place will soon be cleared of the vermin.

—Lentil Biscuit: Cook one cup of lentils in water sufficient to make one pint in all when cooked, and rubbed through a colander. Add to the lentils thus prepared salt to season, and two and one-fourth pints of grated bread crumbs. Shape into biscuits and brown in a hot oven ten or fifteen minutes.—Good Health.

—Fricasseed Tripe: Cut a pound of tripe in narrow strips, put a small cup of water or milk to it, add a bit of butter the size of an egg, dredge in a large teaspoonful of flour, or work it with the butter; season with pepper and salt, let it simmer gently for half an hour, serve hot. A bunch of parsley cut small and put with it is an improvement.—Boston Budget.

—Butter Cakes: Half a pound of fresh butter, half a pound of melted butter, the grated peel of a lemon, three eggs, two pounds of flour and two teaspoonfuls of rum or arrack are kneaded together and set away for a few hours; then the dough is rolled out about the thickness of the back of a knife blade, cut out in any fancy shapes with a tin cake-cutter, and baked on a sheet of tin in a moderately hot oven.—Harper's Bazar.

—Apple Snow: Put twelve good-sized tart apples in cold water and set them over the fire. When soft drain off the water, strip the skins off the apples, core them and lay them in a deep dish. Beat the whites of six eggs to a stiff froth; put half a pound of finely-powdered white sugar to the apples. Beat them to a stiff froth and then add the beaten eggs. Beat the whole to a stiff snow, turn into a dessert dish and serve.—Detroit Free Press.

—Cottage Pudding: One cupful of sugar, one egg, one tablespoonful of butter, one cupful of sweet milk or water, one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, flour enough to make stiff as cake, and two tablespoonfuls of baking powder sifted into dry flour. Bake in a long, flat tin and cut in squares. For sauce, beat the whites of three eggs stiff, add the three yolks and beat together fifteen minutes. Add two tablespoonfuls of fine granulated sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Serve on the pudding.—Housekeeper.

—To a waiter belongs the proud distinction of uttering what is probably the most ungrammatical sentence ever evolved from the brain of illiterate man. One afternoon an old man took his seat at the table and gave his usual order to a new and rather case-hardened knight of the napkin. "Waiter," he piped, as the dishes were slammed down before him, "this beef isn't sufficiently underdone." With a smile of contempt the servitor bore the viands back to the kitchen window and returned a moment later without having changed them. "I'm sorry, sir," he said, "we ain't got no beef what's no underdoner!"—Tit-Bits.

—Quite the gem of the furnishings in the parlor of a pretty apartment up town is a lovely statuette of Cupid standing on a pedestal, behind which is draped in loose folds crimson cloth, as an effective background. The peculiar tint of the marble (?) attracted a visitor, who inquired concerning it, whereupon the mistress confessed: "I saw in some paper that to brush a plaster cast with orange shellac diluted with alcohol would impart this peculiar creamy tint like old ivory, and, chancing upon this excellent reproduction in plaster, I bought it for experiment. You see how successful I have been. Every one admires the color of my boy so much. And I'll tell you a bit more. That rich crimson drapery is a last year's dress, which faded in streaks. I had it dyed, and evolved the rest of my art corner."—N. Y. Times.

CRAPES AND CREPONS.

How the Wrinkled Fabrics Are Woven—The Oriental Crapes.

Crape is a fabric of silk, cotton or wool, with a wrinkled surface. Crepon is the French name for a thick crape, but this season it is any fabric with an uneven surface suggestive of crape, whether woven like a crape or in plaits thrown up by dropping certain weft threads on the under side at definite intervals, after the Jacquard manner, and tightening them by twisting.

The wrinkle of crape is produced by making the weft, and sometimes the warp also, of twisted threads, every alternate group of threads being twisted in the reverse direction. The threads so arranged are loose, that is, with space between them, and when the fabric is completed they untwist, each in its own direction, which gives a surface of uniform irregularity. Twisting warp and weft makes the most perfect crape. If the weft only be twisted and the warp straight the weft threads will push up and down the warp, making a less durable fabric. When the twist is in the weft only there is elasticity across the goods, and when twisted both ways it is elastic both ways.

The result of this weaving is a surface of broken lights and shadows; a surface that reflects less light than if smooth, and absorbs much. Such a surface permits color to be seen to advantage, and crapes are especially beautiful in rich colors suited to them, as vivid red.

Oriental crapes, the most beautiful in the world, are of silk, or of mixed silk and cotton. When of part cotton they are cheaper, but there is no vulgar attempt to conceal the cotton, but it is kept frankly on the surface, and its own good qualities are made to appear. Cotton has less power of reflection than silk, and, therefore, lends itself to increase the absorption of light, which is an object in crape weave. Also, the crimped surface enhances the beauty of cotton thread.

The Japanese Yoboschi crape has the warp of silk and the weft of cotton. Both are twisted. It is so sheer and soft that no one would dream it is not all silk. Japanese Kanka crape, with hair line of color, has straight warp of silk and twisted weft of cotton. It is semi-transparent, as if the warp were of spun glass. French crape is twisted only in the weft, the weft threads being of silk and cotton, alternating regularly to produce a checkered effect.

What is known as mourning crape is not a crape weave. Its wrinkled surface is made by stiffening gauze and pressing it on a matrix.—N. Y. Sun

"August Flower"

"One of my neighbors, Mr. John Gilbert, has been sick for a long time. All thought him past recovery. He was horribly emaciated from the inaction of his liver and kidneys. It is difficult to describe his appearance and the miserable state of his health at that time. Help from any source seemed impossible. He tried your August Flower and the effect upon him was magical. It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends." John Quibell, Holt, Ont.

—No services were held at the M. E. church on Sunday evening on account of the rain and storm.

—Windows were broken by hail recently in Mrs. John Bains house and Dunns.

—The Delano Dramatic Troup visited Buffalo on Thursday, and played "The Tramps Daughter" to a $53, house.

—Prof. J. G. Love has secured a position on the engineering corps, of Mr. Fernstrom, Minneapolis, His family will stay here for the present.

—For an account of the Republican convention and the vote see the inside of this paper. Figure out for yourselves where Harrison votes came from, also read the platform and see how you like it.

—Marshall B. Riley was indicted by the Grand Jury and brought up for trial for assault in the third degree plead guilty and was fined $15. The next man he puts in the lockup will probably have no scars to exhibit.

—The City council will meet at their rooms on Monday, June 27 for the purpose of receiving and correcting the village assessment. If any person is dissatisfied with the assesors work then will be the time to complain.

—Messrs. Frank Coffin, John McGary, and William Kennedy three Hennepin county politicians had quite a lively triangular "set two" in the GAZETTE office on Tuesday. Politics are considerably mixed this season and are gradually growing warm.

—The Eagle says "every merchant in the country should refuse to patronize Minneapolis jobbing houses until the outside or country millers are allowed an unrestricted market." And so the old bird wants an "unrestricted" market does she? She don't seem to entirely forget her Democratic learning!

—Some hail stones as large as two inches in diameter fell here on Sunday evening. They came down with considerable force and several windows were broken in the village. There was quite a hail storm on Saturday evening a few miles west of town. Fred Addicks Jr, who was having a dance at his house issaid to be the looser of eight windows.

—The executive committee for the 4th of July, met and arranged on Thursday evening, by electing John Coolen President; J. C. Hitz, Secretary; and Simon Weldelee, Treasury. They passed a resolution that no monies be paid out except on the order of the President attested by the Secretary.

Chas. Conzet was chosen to have charge of renting refreshment stands on the grounds limited to 3, at $5 each. Shooting of firecrackers is to be prohibited on the grounds.

—If our Republican friends in Delano are any criterian to go by Harrison stands no chance of being President again unless the Democrats make some terrible blunders in nominating an opponent.

When the county Superentendent of Public instruction the Editors of a Republican newspaper, a Post Master and other Republicans have so little respect for the nominee as to allow the flag, accidentally caught at half mast, to remain in that position for four days it looks as if they could be beaten by Grover Cleveland.

LABER Laron Von Kruger took the job and aided by a Democratic crew with the assisting of a prohibitionist holding one guy rope a one legged yeteran of the late war, another, several old soldiers and some boys pulling another Sam Murphy to keep the flag rope straight have lifted the pole, but the flag has not been hoisted since.

A good one on Miss Ella Meeke, the prospective Republican candidate for Superintendent of schools in Hennepin county, has leaked out, and is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that, one day recently, she called upon a class of small children to define the word "adult" and finding them all silent, pointed to herself and said: "I am an adult; now can you tell me what an adult is?" Whereupon, one little urchin held up his hand and hitily replied: "One who wants to be married and can't."

GLORIOUS FOURTH

Delano Will Celebrate.

Judge Canty Will Orate.

Miss Ella Meeke, the wellknown and highly accomplished principal of the Groveland Park schoool, whom the Republicans of Hennepin county, apparently with great unanimity, are naming for the office of superintendent of schools, appears to be not only the intellectual superior of the several young men who are seeking the Republican nomination for that responsible position, but is a lady whose personal popularity is so great in several Democratic strongholds where she has taught school with marked success, that in case she is a candidate, there appears to be hardly a doubt about her election, even if the Democrats should re-nominate, as doubtless they will, Prof. James A. Lewis, who has performed the duties of the office during the past two years with such distinguished ability, and who is every where highly respected for his many good qualities of mind and heart. The newspapers have teemed with her praises of late, and it is reported that some of the good things said of her have reached the ears of Archbishop Ireland over the sea; and it is said that the Archbishop of St Paul, himself a stanch Republican, and, as all the world knows, deeply interested in educational affairs, is greatly pleased with the excellency of the young lady's work in the schools adjacent to his home, and will give her his hearty support in the coming campaign, if she permits her name to be placed up on the ticket. But it is not altogether certain that that gracious and accomplished lady can be prevailed upon to devote any part of her useful life to the service of her party in the capacity of a candidate for office. It is pleasant to reflect, however, that, in the event of the re-election of the high-toned christian gentleman who is now presiding over the schools of Hennepin county with so much efficiency, the educational interests of our sister county will not be intrusted to incompetent hands.

REPUBLICAN.

Four very nice, moral young men are seeking the Republican nomination for superintendent of schools in Hennepin county; but it is said the fundamental qualifications of each pale in insignificance when compared with the scholastic attainments of a gifted, popular young lady—Miss Ella Meeke—for whom the people of the neighboring county are manifesting a decided preference.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. June 10, 1892.

Democrats find nothing but encouragement in the present political situation. The longer the disgraceful scramble for the purchase of votes of the Southern "nigger" delegates is protracted at Minneapolis the more certain will be the defeat of the ticket finally selected. That these negro delegates would be in the market was predicted in this correspondence weeks ago.

The most sensational event of the week was a story which grew out of the visit of Father Ducey, the New York priest who married James G. Blane, Jr., to Washington. It is said that Father Ducey brought some letters that would if made public, deeply compromise the elder Blaine, with him, and that he carried back in lieu of these letters $65,000 in United States currency. These letters are the ones that Mrs. Blain, Jr., threatened to publish if Mr. Blaine, Sr., did not withdraw certain statenents he made just after she secured her divorce, and the money was for her. There are two stories as to where this money came from. One is that it was furnished by Mr. Blaine's friends who feared the effect of the publication of the letters, if he should be nominated, and the other, that they were bought by Mr. Harrison's friends and at once sent by special messenger to John C. New to be used to prevent Mr. Blaine's nomination.

Speaking of Mr. Blaine, I have it on good authority that his resignation was not voluntary, but was the result of a very stormy interview between himself and Mr. Harrison, witnessed by Secretary Elkins, at which Mr. Blaine was given his choice of writing a letter declaring that he would not accept the nomination and advising his friends to support Mr. Harrison, or of immediately resigning.

A sub-committee of the World's Fair House committee is now at work on a bill granting a loan of $5,000,000 to the exposition. Members are reticent about the Provisions likely to be attached to the bill, but they say it will probably be ready to report to the full committee early next week, and if it is approved by the committee it will be at once favorably reported to the House.

Several prominent Mississippians, including Judge Simrall, ex-chief Justice of that state, made arguments before the House Committee on appropriations in favor of an appropriation for the relief of the flood sufferers. The committee suggested that the view of the State officials on the subject should be obtained before any action is taken. Whatever those views may be the committee will not be likely to take favorable action, as it is already on record as opposing such appropriations as being without the authority or precedent.

Senator McPherson has prepared and submitted to the Senate Financial committee a minority report on the effect of our tariff laws upon trade relations with Canada. He presents statistics controverting the conclusion reached by Senator Morrill in the majority report, and showing that producers of farm products in the United States have not been benefited by the McKinley tariff. As soon as these reports are made to the Senate they will be published.

The Farmers Alliance Representatives are to be given an opportunity to have their say on the Subtreasury bill, as the bill will shortly be reported to the House by the Ways and Means committee, and it is understood that the committee an Rules will set aside three days after the appropriation bills are all passed for its debate.

Arizona and New Mexico will soon read their titles clear as soyereign States of the Union, if the republican Senators do not prevent action on the bills which have been passed by the House.

Never before did so many prominent departmental officials attend a national political convention as now in Minneapolis shouting for Mr. Harrison, and never before did a President of United States openly command his own canvas for a remonination by means of private telegraph wires run into the White House, as Mr. Harrison is now doing. Many republicans who were favorable to Mr. Harrison's renomination have been disgusted at the developments of the present week.

It is probable that the rain-making experiments are to continue at Government expense, as the House voted down Representative Enloe's amendment to strike out of the agricultural bill the appropriation for that purpose.

If Congress does not adjourn on the 4th of July, as provided in Representative McMillin's joint resolution, it will be the fault of the Senate. The business of the House is in good shape, and can be easily finished by that time.

Alliance Notes.

Special Correspondent to the Annandale Post.

On May 24 the Wright county Peoples party held their convention in Maple Lake. On account of bad roads and cornplanting being the order of the day the delegation was not so numerous as was hoped, but a great interest was taken by those present on account of the absence of A. Rehaume, D.D. Vandergon, acted as sec'y.

After a Brief address by Mr. P. Kennedy, the following persons were elected to attend the Congressional district Peoples party convention held in Little Falls June 1st. J. Gorman; D. Allen; J. Kuhnley; and D. Vandergon. a committee of 5 was appointed to inquire into the feasibilisy of getting a Wright county Alliance Paper in circulation, said committee to report on or befor June 18.

It was voted that the delegates going to Little Falls should have their expences payed from the Wright County Peoples Party funds. P. K.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

WITH Grover Cleveland for President, Thomas Wilson for Governor. Tariff Reform for the battle cry it looks as if Minnesota might wheel into line with several other western states and give a Democratic plurality if not a rousing majority.

Cleveland, the People's Choice, is Nominated, For President, on the first ballot. At Chicago, with a strong and substantial platform will sweep the country.

Ex-Assiotant Post Master General A. E. STEVENSON, of Illinois, FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

With good men on our state Ticket Minnesota stands some show of lining up with the democrats.

CHICAGO, June 23.—3:35 a.m. The official figures of the first ballot are as follows:

Cleveland, 616½ votes; Gorman, 36½; Carlisle, 14; Whitney, 1; Russel, 1; Stevenson, 16½; Pattison, 1; Hill, 114; Boeis, 104; Morrison, 3; Campbell, 2.

Carnegie Reduces Wages

PITTSBURG, Pa., June 12.—The Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers has received from the Carnegie Steel company, limited, of Homestead, the firms scale for work the ensuing year. In the open hearth furnaces, the firm calls for a reduction of 19 per cent from the present rate, and in the Armor plate, department 20 percent off the old basis. In the minumum is reduced from $25 to $22, and in this mill there is also a general reduction of from 15 to 50 per cent It is thought that their will be no change in the price for puddling. The rate is now $5.50 per ton, and there is little support for a movement to advance to $6.50. -- Globe,

It would appear from this that the McKinley Tariffs, are, from the protectionists standpoint, almost too low, and need histing up another noteh. From a Democratic point of view they seem to do no good toward keeping laborers wages up.

WITH a vigorons canvass, such as we had two years ago, Hennepin county can be carried this fall with a sweeping majority for every Democrat on the ticket from Alderman to President.—The Irish Standard.

The Delano Eagle takes occasion nearly every week to sneer at its republican contemporaries in this county. Its spitefulness is powerless to do any harm. Every since its editor, while acting as chairman of the democratic party, played the part of Judas, its political opinions have had but little weight. It may keep on forever shreiking, "I am a republican," but with the record it has behind it, it will scarcely convince a thinking public.—The Wright County Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. June 17, 1892.

Democratic Senators and representatives will be plentiful at Chicago, and those who do not go in person will be there in spirit to assist in the selection of the next president and Vice President of the United States. The democrats in Congress have widely differing opinions as to who ought to be nominated, but they all agree that the nominee, whoever he may be, will be elected. There are no hard feelings between the champions of the several gentlemen who are being pushed for the nomination, it is only a question of availability.

It is conceded by all that Mr. Cleveland will have a majority on the first ballot, and the most sanguine of his supporters claim that he will get more than the necessary two-thirds on the first ballot. Conservative men believe that if the votes of neither Cleveland nor Hill show a rapid increase after the first ballot they will both be dropped. There is however, a good deal of guess-work about ante-convention predictions, no matter how well posted their makers may be.

Senator Pugh is one of those who believe that the nomination of Senator Gorman is a political necessity, in order to prevent the third party getting a foothold in the South.

He says that several of the Southern States will be in danger, if they are not actually lost, if any other man is nominated.

Democrats are not at all alarmed over the rumors of the formation of a silver party. If the dissatisfied silver republicans should all go into the movement, and they should be joined by the silver men of the South, they could easily carry enough States to throw the election of President into the House which would, of course, mean a democratic President. This is a democratic year anyway.

Mr. Harrison's friends give his case away constantly in private. Mr. John W. Foster, of Indiana, who has held ever since this admistration came in peculiar relations with the department of State- some say that Mr. Harrison has used him as a spy upon Mr. Blaine—, having authority only second to that of the Secretary, stated privately since Mr. Harrison's renomination that he considered Indiana a very doubtful State, with the chances decidedly in favor of the democrats if no blunder is made by the democratic convention at Chicago. That was a good deal for a man as near to Mr. Harrison as Mr. Fosteris to admit, and shows that the Indiana democrats in Congress know just what they are talking about when they say that the electoral vote of Indiana is certain to be cast for the nominees of the Chicago convention.

Representative Stackhouse of South Carolina, who died suddenly of heart failure, this week, makes the sixth member of the Fifty-second Congress that has been struck down by the relentless hand of the rider of the pale horae

It is probable that Mr. Harrison will use the vacancy in his cabinet and also that upon the Supreme Court to placate some of the influential republicans who are dissatisfied with his renomination with that end in view, Secretary Elkins has been sent to get the advice of Chauncey Depew, and to consult with ex-bosses Platt and Miller, of New York and there is reason for believing that Mr. Blaine will also be consulted about these appointments. The last is, of course, a bitter pill for Mr. Harrison to swallow, but he is to shrewd a politician not to fully recognize that he stands the slightest chance of being elected unless he can get the undivided support of the leaders of his party, and he stands ready to humiliate himself to get that support; but it does not follow that he will get it, no matter what he does.

The House passed the fortification appropriation bill and is now considering Representative Shiveley's bill to reduce the duty on tin plate, which it hopes to pass before the close of the week. The bill provides that after the first of next October the duty on tin plate shall be 1 cent per pound, and that after October 1, 1894 it shall be put on the free list.

The Ways and Means committee of the House has decided to defer for the present consideration of Representative McMillin's resolution providing for adjournment on July 4. The reason for this is that the members of the committee are satisfied that the Senate will not agree to adjournment so early as that.

Mr. Harison is trying to placate the silver republicans with empty honors. It was at his suggestion that Senator Dubois, of Idaho, was selected to make the speech formally notifying Mr. Harrison of his nomination.

Knowing that the chance of getting anything after the 4th of next March is next to nothing, the men who nominated Mr. Harrison are swarming to Washington to get something now.

An Open Letter by Diabolus,

It has been some time since I recieved your letter, I suppose you think I am slow in replying. But the fact is your letter gave my nerves such a shock that I have been in a state of bewilderment ever since I recieved it and I hardly think I have recovered my equilibrium yet, for since taking my pen in hand to address you, I feel a sort of trembling shaking sensation. By way of an apology, permit me to say that I had no idea that I was capable of arrousing you to such a pitch of indignation; or that you were capable of being so aroused on this subject; especially as all I said so nearly corresponded with what I heard you say, and after thinking the subject; over, I more than half believe you did not mean all you said; especially, after reading a sermon of one of your eminent divines, and (presumably) a man of your party, he certainly is not a prohibitionist. I will quote a few lines from his sermon, or lecture, (I don't know what to call it) he does not take any bible text, perhaps it is taken from a plank in the republican platform, or if not, from one they are going to put in. This is what he says.

"If I could close every saloon in this city to-day by raising my finger, I would not raise my finger"

My! you ought to have heard exultant shouts of joy that I heard which issued from every devil's throat on earth and hell, and you ought to have heard the order which was immediately issued by Belzebub (our Prince) to enlarge our dominion, for said he, if that is the way the ministers of the Gospel are going to preach, and the people do, as they say, and believe as they do, hell will not hold half the people that will come here, Let me quote another paragraph which so nearly corresponds with what I said in my first letter to you, I am half inclined to believe, he must have seen my letter. You remember I said we must make the saloon business respectable by permitting "only respectable citizens to engage in it with a few church members." But your eminent divine says, this saloon business ought to be carried on only by the church.

This is what he says. "What we must do to combat intemperance is to provide public resorts which are not tainted with vice and corruption. If people must drink, we can provide them respectable places to drink in. We can open saloons where beer and light wines may be had by those who want them, and where the surrounding will be clear, cheerful and moral. These may be billiard tables, and bowling alleys, and tables where people may sit and chat while they drink their beer. There may also be a supply of newspapers and periodicals. Such a saloon as this would offer attractions which would enable it to compete effectively with vicious resorts. It is not possible to suppress saloons, but it is possible to elevate them to a plane which they have never before occupied." Do you wonder that we devils shouted? Are you surprised that our Prince gave orders to enlarge our borders?

We have not time to quote but a few paragraphs from this eminent divine, one more must suffice.

"Then I would have these saloons open on Sundays durmg proper hours, for the accommodation of those who are in the habit of having beer or wine every day; and who now have to encourage law-breaking by entering side doors into dank and ill-smelling places for their Sunday beverage. I would have these places law-abiding. I would have them close strictly at the expiration of legal honrs."

Now my dear angel please give our first letter a second perusal, and see if we asked anything more than your eminent divine says is right and proper. So if you indorse him you must indorse us, all the difference between us is we wanted only good respectable citizens with a few church members to engage in this business but he says have none but church members engage in it well we have no objection to that if it suits you any better, in fact I think myself that would be an improvement for a great many would join the church then that will not now, and it would be but a short time before the whole world would be in the church. Much obliged for the suggestion.

Dr. Rainsford, I am with you heart and hand, soul and body, yes, saloon and all I have; when will your church be open to receive members? I am ready any day of the week or even Sunday, that's "the day of all the week the best" for my business, but never mind, I can stand one day off. I suppose I might hire a bar-tender one day, but I want to bring them all in to the church, so name the day Doctor, you will have a full house, and if it happens to be communion day, I'll furnish the "light wines," and while I think of it, don't forget to pass the contribution box, we are a very liberal sort of people, but we may not be there again 'till next Communion day you know Sunday is our best day, but we will not only furnish the "light wines" but we hope to be able to come with full purses and liberal hearts; for we have faith and do firmly believe that a church organized on this plan, will prosper and grow and fill the whole earth and if it does not fill heaven, it will hell, and people say that is what I am working for and when I look around and see what an army of workers I have got in my service, saints as well as sinners, I am encouraged to believe I shall succeed.

You were very emphatic in warning us not to mention it, even in hell, that you are our friend, but we do not apprehend that there will be any necessity for mentioning it to any one who sees how we look, and act, and hears how we talk, for they will very soon recognize us as children of one parent. And now my dear Rose, I will be honest with you, and tell you one truth, though it makes me rather shaky when I think of it.

You talked about those cranky Prohibitionists all right for a while but near the close of your letter, you came a little to near telling the truth to please me.

Well you know they call me the father of lies, but I do not acknowledge that to be true, and if I could, I would make the one who said it take it back, although some say that a lie well told and stuck to is as well as the truth, and while I cant exactly indorse that saying, I do indorse this one, viz, "The truth is not always to be spoken the truth you came so near telling was this, you said, that the Prohibition party as a political organization, was the cleanest, purest, and most unselfish party in the world, now there may be some truth in that statement, but the less we say about it, the better, for us, you are a republican, and I am a Saloonist, we, both, favor high priced saloon, the Prohibitionists do not favor any sort of a saloon, so if we cannot say any thing bad about them, let us not say anything good about them; If we cannot "curse them," let us not "bless them," That would be cheating hell, and though, perhaps you think that does not hurt you much, it does hurt me; and I suppose it is hardly necessary to remind you, that you are not quite "big enough to chop my head off yet," you must know that you cant chop mine off without endangering your own' we are to closely united for that, it is only by being united to us, that you stand. If we are divided you fall. We have as many friends in the democratic party, as we have in the republican some say more, so don't go to putting on to many airs. "He whom the gods would sacrifice they make fat."

Another thing you came very near saying, the Prohibition party is growing, unless you want to say it was growing smaller, I will correct that and believe it too, of course we know better, but if people want to close their eyes to the truth, and believe a lie, and "be damned," "what is that to us"? There is one other thing you said, that nettles me a littel, viz: when it gets big enough "to whip the republicans, the democrats, and the devil you was a going to join it," but there is one consoling fact about that ie: if every body talks that way it will never get big enough. yours as ever,

DIABOLUS.

By his Clerk, J. S. L.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The late rains we have had has done considerible damage to the roads washed out culverts and fills and in some places made them almost impassable.

Some fields of corn have been almost destroyed especially where they were on sloping ground. Do not remember of seeing such rains and hearing such heavy thunder for twenty years or more everything is flooded.

Most of the Republicans in Independence seem to be will pleased with the nomination of Ben Harrison as the Republican canadidate for President of the United States. It is an old and well worn adage that possession is nine points in law and as the Republicans are in it, it gives them great advantage over any other party, and the head goat that led the flock will work day and night to avenge themselves of there adversaries and yet they will have a mighty host on the other side to confront.

One week from to day meets at Chicago in the convention the servants of the old democratic party to nominate Grover Cleveland or some other good Democrat for President of the United States of America consisting of States both north and south of the Mason and Dixon line. Now there is no one more willing than I to grant to each individual of this common wealth their every rites, religeous, political or otherwise but never could see why it was that many (not all) Republicans think that the safely and perpetuity of their goverment was given only to the Republican party for thirty years, except four, they have been in authority and set in the uppermost seats in the synagogue and yet they are as anxious today for the offices of the goverment and the spoils thereof as they were in the beginning. There cry is the democratic party has no redeeming qualities. Did the Democratic party ever in open day light, or night under the shadows of Mt. Vernon steal a President of the United States? Was it the democrats in 1873 that Demonitized silver when it was at a premium of 33 percent? Was it a democrats administration that imposed a high protective duty on imports higer than the war tariff? Is the Democrats held responsible "For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world. For imposing taxes on us without our consent" all we democrats ask is a fair trial. Study both sides of the question and see who's ox is being gored the worst. Some of our Republican friends are fighting the war of the Rebellion yet and will be until the day of their death for one who loves the flag of their country and the preservation of the union much as any one living would be glad to know that the remembrance of the late rebellion had droped into oblivion it was first a big family row and now the prodigal has returned for heavens sake let us live in peace and no more let the extermination war cloud of the rebellion and disunion have over this fair land of ours. The people north and south are one common people and the heritage our forefathers bequeathed to us is ours to preseverve, ours to perpetuate, ours forever by the right of inheritance.

Earl Hoisington is at Minneapolis today attending the Alliance convention.

The M. E. Church at Armstrong will be dedicated next Sunday forenoon. Everybody invited. The heavy rains have drowned out the rest of the news so I bring this hastily written communication to a close Youre in hope that that celebrating body of democrats at Chicago on 21st will act wisely and judiscously.

GRIEF HIS PORTION.

Ex-Secretary Blaine Again Feels the Heavy Hand of Death—His Son Emmons Expires After a Brief Illness in Chicago, and Thus Is Ended a Promising Career.

CHICAGO, June 20.—Emmons Blaine, the second son of James G. Blaine, is dead. He passed away at 11:16 Saturday morning at the residence of his wife's mother, Mrs. Cyrus McCormick, No. 135 Rush street. His death was caused by septicæmia, or blood-poisoning, which set in after two days' illness from a bowel complaint. It came in the midst of a seemingly peaceful sleep, and so sudden and unexpected was it that Mrs. Emmons Blaine and the attending physician were the only ones in the room at the time.

For an hour members of the family plied the wires in the attempt to break the news to ex Secretary Blaine. But for some time Mr. Blaine could not be found. Late in the afternoon he was reached by telegraph at Bar Harbor, and with Mrs. Blaine and Miss Harriett Blaine started at once for Chicago.

Sorrow has borne heavily upon the Blaine family. Two years and a half ago there were six adult children, and now there are only left James G. Blaine Jr., Mrs. Walter Damrosch and Miss Harriet Blaine. In January, 1890, Mr. Walker Blaine died in Washington of pneumonia. Mrs. Coppinger died three weeks later, and on Saturday death robbed the illustrious parents of another son.

[The deceased was 38 years old. He was educated at Harvard and also took a post graduate course in law. He was formerly assistant general freight agent of the Northwestern road. This position he resigned in December, 1887, to accept that of general freight and passenger agent of the Chicago, Santa Fe & California road, which was then being built between Chicago and Kansas City. In the spring of 1889 this road was reincorporated by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and Mr. Blaine was called to the vice presidency of the West Virginia Central & Pittsburgh road, which was controlled by Mr. Elkins and in which his father, then secretary of state, had a financial interest. This road was operated for the purpose of shipping coal from the Cumberland and other valleys and Mr. Blaine's headquarters were at Baltimore.

While there Mr. Blaine married Miss Anita McCormick, of Chicago, daughter of the late Cyrus McCormick. The wedding took place at Richland Springs, N. Y., September 20, 1889. It was celebrated at the country home of Mrs. McCormick. After the birth of their son, McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Blaine returned to Chicago and have since occupied the McCormick residence, No. 135 Rush street.

With the change in residence came a change in position and Mr. Blaine was made general western manager of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad system. Six weeks ago he was elected president of the Chicago Ship-building Company, which was organized by the Illinois Steel Company, and he had scarcely entered upon the duties of his new office.]

LARGE GOLD ORDERS.

Austria Makes a Heavy Call on the Treasury—Over Seven Millions Sent This Week—To Be Used for the New Currency—Bankers Think It Should Be Regulated.

NEW YORK, June 20.—During last week $7,100,000 in gold has been ordered from the sub-treasury for shipment to Europe. It is ordered through Austrian and German bankers in this city, and is for the Austrian government for the purpose of forming the gold currency of that country under the new currency laws just passed. This consignment is only a beginning, however, as it is expected that a similar amount will be sent out week by week until fall. The total amount required by the Austrian government is $100,000,000, all of which under existing conditions will go from this country. By American bankers the proposed depletion of the treasury to so large an extent is regarded as unwise. They claim that it is placing the gold currency upon a prospective and speculative basis, and that should any unforeseen financial depression take place the results will be disastrous.

TRAGEDY ON A TRAIN.

One Lawyer Murders Another — Judge Morgan, of Mississippi, Shot in the Back by H. F. Foster.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 20.—Judge Bright Morgan, of Hernando, Miss., was shot dead Saturday morning on an Illinois Central train while on his way to Memphis by Lawyer Henry Foster. Judge Morgan was a delegate to the Chicago convention. Morgan and Foster had quarreled over a law suit in which they were opposing lawyers. Two weeks ago Foster had a difficulty with Morgan's son, hearing of which Morgan gave Foster a sound caning. They had not met since until Saturday morning. Foster boarded the train at Alden and shot Morgan twice without uttering a word. He surrendered to an officer at the next station. Morgan was en route to Chicago.

Several physicians were at once called in to alleviate the sufferings of the unfortunate victims. Not one single occupant of Ryan's store escaped injury. Many, it is thought, will die from the effect of their hurts. Mr. Ryan is a gentleman of considerable prominence and a former representative of Wayne county in the legislature.

Seven others were more or less seriously injured, some escaping with broken legs, arms and other injuries. A few were fortunate in escaping without bruises.

RUIN AND DEATH.

The Storm King Not Yet Satisfied with His Fatal Work This Year—He Visits Several Counties in Minnesota and Adds Nearly Seventy Names to His Already Long List of Victims.

FAIRMONT, Minn., June 17.—With a roar equal to the din of twenty railway trains running over a score of iron bridges a great cyclone swept over the southern Minnesota counties of Jackson, Martin, Faribault, Freeborn, Blue Earth, Mower and Fillmore Wednesday afternoon. The storm began about 7 miles west of the village of Jackson, moved eastward over the villages of Sherburne and Wells in Martin county, passed lightly over Faribault county, caused great havoc in Freeborn and spent itself in the two counties farther east.

The loss of life has been very heavy—how heavy will not be known for several days, as railway trains are abandoned because of washed-out bridges and tracks, wagon roads are flooded and wholly impassable and telegraph wires are in such a tangle that it will be impossible to put them to rights in several days. The loss of life in this county will probably reach thirty; that in Freeborn eight or ten, and that elsewhere will bring the total up to nearly seventy, if not more. Besides this the loss to buildings, crops and railroad property in the half dozen counties will reach $300,000. The Root, Zumbro and other rivers of southern Minnesota are raging torrents.

Scores of people received wounds, and as most of them were in the country they suffered untold tortures through exposure to cold wind and rain and lack of surgical attendance. The storm will entail great hardship upon those who lost their all, although crops are not injured.

WELLS, Minn., June 17.—A most disastrous hurricane swept over this county Wednesday night, destroying everything in its path. Its course was from north to south. Houses, barns and machinery in the track of the storm were totally wrecked and a large amount of stock killed. The cyclone was accompanied by a great electrical display.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 17.—The great storm did its most destructive work along the Iowa border around Minnesota lake and south of the villages of Wells and Sherburne. Reports brought in by trainmen say a district schoolhouse 4 miles east of Sherburne was blown into kindling wood in a twinkling, killing sixteen of the eighteen pupils and the teacher. In the farming district south of Minnesota lake many residences and barns were blown away and four people were killed. John Brown, a prosperous farmer, one of the victims, was killed by flying timbers in his yard. His wife, John Englebreeht, a hired man and a school-teacher were injured, two of them fatally.

Farmers from the southern Martin county line report at Wells that at least thirty people were crushed by falling buildings, and they fear later reports will increase rather than diminish the loss of life. Near Bowen Mills the house of a Bohemian family was blown entirely away, leaving a family of eight to spend the night in a driving rainstorm.

At Lyndon, on the Iowa border, a family named Peterson, consisting of a man, his wife and child, were crushed in their house and four other persons injured. Several people had bones broken at Easton and three buildings were blown down. Spring Valley, Mower county, was a heavy sufferer, more, however, from the flood than from the wind. Houses, bridges, sidewalks and all movable property was swept away by the resistless waters. Considerable live stock perished and much damage was done. Horses and cattle were drowned in large numbers near Austin, and bridges and dams were carried away. All trains at that point are held and people are going about in boats. In Blue Earth county several houses were blown down, and a Mrs. Nagle was blown into a tree top, but she was only slightly injured.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., June 17.—Two death-dealing cyclones passed through the northern part of Freeborn county Wednesday afternoon, the first sweeping through several townships at 4:30 and the other a little after 6. Six or seven persons are known to have been killed. Two of the number were children of Henry Christian. Charles Christopherson, wife and two children were badly injured. Christopherson's buildings were all wrecked. J. H. Hekes, his wife and two children were terribly crushed. The wife and one child will die.

The village of Hartland and nearly everything in Hartland township was razed. In Freeborn township Mikkel Iverson's wife and two children are missing and their home obliterated. Moland Steen's buildings were ruined and his child killed. Carl Hendrickson's fine residence and barns were demolished. Chris Nigard's barn blew over and Ole Hansen, who sought refuge in it, was killed. The creamery at Freeborn was wrecked and F. B. Drake's buildings were strewn over his farm. H. D. Threed's buildings were blown to pieces and his crops ruined. Hailstones as large as goose eggs fell for three-quarters of an hour.

PRESTON, Minn., June 17.—Fillmore county was visited by a cloudburst during the night which destroyed crops, carried away bridges and sidewalks and drowned many cattle and hogs. The loss to crops may reach $50,000.

WAITERS ON A STRIKE.

In Chicago 650 of Them Are Out, and Many Restaurants Closed.

CHICAGO, June 17. — The waiter's strike is growing more general and the down town restaurants are in a bad plight. About 650 waiters are out. The proprietors with only one exception say they will never sign the agreement formulated by the strikers. It is the intention of the strike leaders to call out the waiters at the most prominent clubs. The Union League, the Iroquois, the University, the Illinois and the Standard clubs are the ones selected to suffer.

Two Boys Drowned in a Quarrel.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., June 17.—George Murray and Frank Weston, two young boys, quarreled while playing on the boom at the foot of Mason street Thursday night. Murray seized his companion and attempted to throw him off the boom. In the struggle both fell into the river and were drowned. Murray was 8 and Weston 6 years old.

Cyclone in Spain.

MADRID, June 17.—A cyclone Wednesday wrecked several buildings at Badalone, including two factories. Eight workmen were killed and a number injured.

COUNTING THE VICTIMS.

The Death List of the Minnesota Cyclone Exaggerated Somewhat — Latest Estimates Place the Number of Lives Lost at from Thirty to Fifty.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 18.—The reports from the cyclone which devastated the southern portions of this state Wednesday come in slowly, owing to the extent of the country covered and the terrible condition of the roads, rendering communication with the towns not having telegraphic facilities almost impossible. While fortunately the first reports as to loss of life prove to have been somewhat overestimated, the death roll is not less than thirty and it may grow to fifty.

The trail of the storm is marked by ruined houses, devastated farms, dead and mangled men, women and children. The groves of trees surrounding farm houses were laid low—in many cases not a vestige remains of houses, barns or stock; everything fell before the terrible tornado. Horses and cattle have been found many miles from where the tornado caught them in its grasp.

At Wells, Minn., during the passage of the storm, which lasted about fifteen minutes, the air was full of rubbish of every description—scantlings, boards, window sashes, chickens, ducks and geese were whirled about in the grasp of the current 200 feet above earth. The cloud rose and fell at intervals of a quarter of a mile, and dozens of houses were wrecked at every swoop. The dead and injured in the Polish settlement, about 8 miles northeast of Wells, cannot now be estimated. So far as known the list of deaths in this neighborhood number eighteen. It is probable the list of dead is much larger than now known. The injured recorded thus far number twenty-seven.

Albert Lea reported the list of dead in Freeborn county difficult to ascertain, but so far as known numbers eleven. The injured list is a long one, while the destruction to property is very great, as the path of the cyclone was through the richest farming section of the state. Blooming Prairie also reports great damage in that vicinity, but no loss of life.

Fairmont in Martin county reports two killed there and a great number injured. Seven persons were killed between Winnebago City and Sherburne. The wind demolished a schoolhouse, seriously injuring the teacher and sixteen scholars. Much damage to property is reported, but it is impossible to estimate the amount.

MINER LAW SUSTAINED.

The Michigan Supreme Court Decides Unanimously That the Election Measure Is Constitutional.

LANSING, Mich., June 18.—The supreme court has rendered a decision sustaining the constitutionality of the Miner election law, which was passed by the last legislature. The decision of the court was unanimous. Justice Montgomery wrote the opinion. All the points raised by the petitioners are fully discussed. The court declares that the right of the legislature to determine the mode of choosing electors has been firmly established in practice since the adoption of the constitution, and does not seem to admit of controversy. The act in question is in conflict with the law of congress in so far as it attempts to fix a date for the meeting of electors and the method of certifying to their action, but the law is not necessarily inoperative because in some of its provisions the legislature has exceeded its power. The court says:

"We have considered the questions presented in the case with that care that the exceeding importance of the issue seems to imperatively require, and reach the conclusion that the statute must stand as the lawful edict of the legislature. The injustice of any other than a uniform system of electing the president of the United States is manifest in legislating upon this subject, it should not be regarded from a party standpoint, but neither the fact that this important consideration has been overlooked, nor that this legislation may result in serious injustice can extend our jurisdiction or justify us in usurping functions which under the constitution pertain to the legislature."

The court politically is three republicans and two democrats. The Miner law was passed by the last legislature, which was democratic.

UNFORTUNATE CHILDREN.

Five of Them Are Drowned in the Ohio River Near Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., June 18.—Five children, ranging from 12 to 15 years of age, were drowned in the Ohio river at Neville island, 12 miles below this city, at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. Their names were Paul, Rudolph, Edith and Maggie Pittock and Edith Richardson. It appears that the children drove a buggy into the river to wash. In some manner the vehicle was overturned and the children were thrown into the river. The two boys made heroic efforts to save their companions, but they were unequal to the task, and before assistance reached them they had all sunk beneath the waves.

It is expected that congress will meet for that purpose almost immediately.

The child was still alive, and will probably live, but is terribly emaciated about the face, caused by hunger and being almost eaten up by mosquitoes.

A New Prison Warden.

The board of prison managers met in St. Paul and elected a successor to Albert Garvin. Manager Hall was the only member absent. Warden Garvin's resignation was accepted and Henry Wolfer, of the Detroit (Mich.) house of correction, was unanimously chosen in his stead, and an order to that effect was issued to the employes of the prison.

SPRINGTIME'S TEACHING.

When the wild storms of winter are over,
And all nature throbs 'neath the sun's loving light;
When from earth's bosom the green grass is peeping,
And flowers are springing from dampness and blight,
Should not our hearts, filled with deepest emotion,
Unto "Our Father in Heaven" ascend;
As the sweet warblers of nature's Te Deum
Carol their praise to their Maker and Friend?

Earth is so beautiful, man so ungrateful,
God is so kind, so forgiving, so good;
Take heart, then, weary one, He who from darkness
Can this cold world with His glory thus flood,
Shall He not gently, when grief seems to fold thee
In the black fetters of life's winter night,
Lifting the cloud that hangs over thy spirit,
Lead thee from darkness to marvelous light?

Shining through showers the rainbow of promise,
Spring's lovely child throws its arms round the earth,
And will not the "Sun of God's Righteousness" gladly
For the "spirt of heaviness" grant thee "new birth."
So let us praise Him for life's glad awak'ning,
So let us thrill 'neath the breath of His love,
And the sweet babe of hope, born anew in our bosom,
With fond arms will reach out to Heaven above.

LARRY'S ESCAPE.

How a Sailor Gave a Brutal Captain the Slip.

Larry Marker, first two days ashore from a lengthy China cruise, pushed open the door of one of the numerous grog shops along the water front and walking up to the bar called for a drink. His pockets were well lined with the "shiners," and he had been having and was yet having a "good time," while he saw the town and got some of the kinks out of his legs. Larry was by no means a reckless fellow, but he did like to spend money freely when he had it, and this was one of those occasions.

"Hello, Larry!" said a heavily-bearded man leaning against the bar, "where did y' drop from? How long a' y' been ashore?"

Larry looked at the speaker an instant and then wrung the hand that was put out to him.

"Blow me, Jim, but I never 'spected to see y'! I just came from th' China seas. What a' y' doin'?"

"Same ol' thing—coastin'!"

"Thet so? Well, I wouldn't mind tryin' it m'self. I'm gettin' tired o' these long trips."

"There's a good many o' th' same mind, I tell you. Y' know the Carstairs? Well, nine o' her men desarted to-day; couldn't stand th' treatment old Tasker giv' 'em, an' now she's a'lyin' out in th' bay short-handed, all ready to sail, but ain't got 'nuff men by three or four to handle her ropes. Sarves old Tasker right, too, I say. Never was a meaner cuss in a captain's berth."

"Right y' are there, Jim; right y' are," returned Larry, and the two fell to talking over old times.

A few minutes later Larry Marker had left the place and with bent head was pushing his way along the uneven pavement which bordered upon the wharves. His lodgings were at a sailor's boarding house at the lower end of the shipping front.

The rain beat furiously in his face and the water got in his eyes and half blinded him. The night was a dark one, anyhow, and the lamps which lit the pavement were so few and far between as to be almost useless.

He had gone a couple of blocks in this way, hardly looking around at all, when suddenly something thick was thrown over his head and a pair of arms were clasped about his own as he tried to tear the covering from him.

Then, kicking and struggling with might and main, he felt himself picked up bodily by what he judged must be a couple of men and carried along at a dog trot.

Where he was going he had not the least idea. As to who had him he had even less idea, if that was possible. All he knew was that a thick covering, which felt like a double gunny sack, was over his head and that a hand on his mouth prevented his making any outcry.

In a few minutes he heard the steps of those carrying him resounding on planking and he came to the conclusion that they were on one of the wharves. Then he heard a man ask if they "had him" and another say "yes," but that "he fought like a demon." Next, he felt a rope being passed around his body, lashing his arms tightly to his sides, and an instant later, helpless, he was being lowered into what he knew from its movements must be a boat. Then he could hear the regular rise and fall of oars between the thole pins and the soft running of water close behind him.

Fifteen minutes later, as near as he could judge, he was hoisted in the air, the covering was pulled from his head, the lashings around him cut loose and he found himself standing on the deck of a good-sized bark and confronting a red-bearded, surly-looking man in a sort of half uniform. On either side of him were a couple of red-shirted men, evidently those who had just hoisted him up from the boat.

One glance was sufficient for Larry to realize the whole thing. He had been "shanghied," and by the very old Tasker of whom he and Jim had been talking a short while before. Tasker was short handed, could not get men because of his brutal treatment of them, and being all ready to sail had sent out a kidnaping party to fill the vacant places.

The Carstairs was off for a long cruise and Larry was off with her, just as he had gotten ashore from two years of hot suns and hard work. The whole probable future passed like a panorama before his mind's eye.

He was standing close to the rail. Old Tasker was waiting for him to burst out in a torrent of rage and abuse. He wondered at Larry's silence and stood there, eyeing his captive with a demoniacal leer of satisfaction.

"Well, I guess yer in fer the v'yage!" he said.

With one bound Larry was up with him, and had knocked him flat with a blow from the shoulder. The next instant, before any of the others could stop him, he had sprung to the rail and dived head first into the waters of the bay.

Tasker jumped to his feet, half dazed by the blow.

"Into that boat, all o'y'!" he roared, "and bring th' cuss back or drown him!"

There was a rush of half a dozen of the men to the side. The falls had not been unhooked, and they swarmed down them into the boat. In a flash the fastenings were cast off and, with the second mate in the stern sheets, they pulled away.

Larry had taken a long header from the Carstairs' rail and, when he struck the water, he went down for ten feet without a stop. Then he struck out horizontally and, with quick strokes made in the direction he knew the shore to be in, all the time keeping under water.

At last, when he felt he must have fresh air, he let himself rise slowly, so slowly that his head made not the least splash as it broke the still water of the bay.

Then he took a big draught of fresh air and looked around him. He was nearly a hundred feet from the Carstairs, and he heard "old Tasker" swearing and bellowing some commands to the boat.

Turning his head in the direction of the shore he saw, not twenty feet distant, the boat which he judged had been put out after him. The men were lying on their oars and the officer in the stern was standing up with his back toward him, scanning the bay around him.

It was evident they had not yet detected him. They were looking in every direction but the right one. But it was equally evident to Larry that he could not hope to pass them and get to shore, his only place of refuge, without being seen, when his capture would be only a matter of a short time. The night was dark, but there was a good deal of phosphorescence in the water and his movements would show him to them very speedily. Swimming under water for that distance was beyond even him, and he was an excellent swimmer.

As the boat lay there, not moving except for a slight rocking, and he saw them all looking away from him, an idea came to Larry which made him silently sink his head below the water again and strike out under water toward his pursuers.

A few strokes and he allowed himself to rise very gradually. Everything depended upon how accurately he had judged the distance between his first position and the boat. If he had gone three feet too little or too much his capture was insured. What he wanted—what he must do—was to come up immediately under the stern of the boat.

Presently, just as he thought his head would come above the surface of the water, he felt something hard over him, and, reaching up, he touched the boat's bottom. With a little maneuvering he moved backward and felt his head rise above the water. He was just under the counter of the boat.

"Let her go on there!" a voice growled overhead, and Larry thrust one arm forward and down and grasped the keel; the other arm he bent above his head against the sternmost part of the counter to fend himself off with.

As he lay his position was not a easy one, but he thought he could retain it for a time. His body sloped astern, entirely covered by water, so that only his head and part of his shoulders which were concealed by the boat's overhang, were above the surface.

The boat started ahead slowly and—Larry thanked his stars—toward shore. For awhile they patroiled parallel with the water front and he had to hang on and hope they would come a little nearer to the wharves.

He was beginning to get very tired. He had nothing to grasp which afforded him any good hold and his fingers were becoming numb. The water swirled and rushed past his head, but it was evident the trifling noise it made was not heard by those above him.

Presently the boat turned toward shore. In a minute or so he saw the dark outline of one of the bulkheads of the piers. He glanced at the water intervening. There was about two hundred feet between him and the shore. He made up his mind to try it.

Once again he sank, having taken a long breath, and made for the shore under water. By and by he had come to the surface again.

The instant his head broke the water there was a yell from out in the river. They had discovered him, he knew. But they were nearly a hundred feet away and he had not more than that to cover in order to be safe.

He went at it arm over arm. He had never known before how fast he could swim. They gained on him but Larry kept it up. When he reached the pier he dived under the stringer piece and his pursuers halted. They couldn't follow him there.

A couple of minutes later a figure appeared on the wharf. It was Larry.

The men in the boat saw him shake his fist at them and then move quickly away. The second mate's heart quaked as he thought of the reception "Old Tasker" would give him when he came back empty-handed. And Larry went off to his lodgings, well satisfied with the outcome of his adventure, notwithstanding it had given him the most unpleasant experience of his life of danger and hardship.—Francis C. Williams, in Detroit Free Press.

TRICKS OF A BEAVER.

How a Tame One Undertook to Dam the Arkansas River.

A tame beaver, kept some years ago by the soldiers at Bent's fort, on the Arkansas river, became quite famous on account of his sagacity. This animal was caught when young, and became perfectly docile, being a great favorite of the families of the fort and of the trappers when they returned from their trips to the mountains, says the Great Divide. The little fellow could never be cured of his instinct to build dams. He actually undertook to dam the Arkansas river, and worked for months all night long, returning to the fort every morning as the sun rose. He cut down quite a number of large trees, but life proved too short for the completion of his plans.

While around the fort he was constantly turning over every kind of a vessel that contained water and collecting sticks to head it off as it flowed away. One night by oversight the beaver was locked up in the warehouse. During the night in nosing about he discovered a ten-gallon tank of molasses that had been left uncovered. That discovery proved Jack's doom. The next day he was found gasping for life, having been caught in the sticky mass as the tank was upturned. He never recovered from the shock, and was tenderly buried in the presence of a large circle of his friends.

Why did it strike you as funny?" Burlesque—"It was a pun." Bookworm—"A pun! I do not understand." Burlesque—"Yes, a pun, for it was a play upon words."—Mail and Express.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Her little majesty of Holland is a merry, good-natured child, and has already shown signs of a superior intellect. She looks forward eagerly to her visit in Berlin, as she will then have six little military princes to play with. It is likely that she will be betrothed to one of them during her stay.

—The tiles about the fireplace in the dining-room of Gov. Russell's home in Cambridge are each ornamented by a picture of one of the old houses occupied by the ancestors of the governor and his wife. As Mrs. Russell is a descendant of Gov. John Hancock, the tile representing the noted Hancock house on Beacon street in Boston naturally has the place of honor.

—An Englishman stopping at a Boston hotel was kept awake by a compound of disagreeable noises, and upon his return to England he told the story to Mr. Browning. He said that he endured the annoyances as long as possible, and then called a servant to explain it, which he did. "Oh, sah! that is the Browning club, just reading Browning, sah! That is all, sah!"

—It is stated that the allowance made to Cardinal Melchers by Prince Bismarck will have to be paid him during his life, as it was on this understanding that he resigned the see of Cologne. In a number of other cases the recipients of pensions from the Guelph fund have acquired vested rights to them. These amounts will be deducted from the money paid to the duke of Cumberland.

—The new "American Society of Authors," which has been set up in this country, is organized upon the model of an English society of authors, which has been doing service for some time past by promoting intercourse among book writers, and by giving them information concerning copyright laws, the ways of publishers, and the means of securing popularity. Few of the successful authors of this country have yet joined the American society.

—Howling Bear, an Indian prophet of evil, predicts that within two years the people of the whole country will be suffering for food, and there will be a general famine over the country, when all the people will be without corn or wheat and the animals will die for want of grass. He says that he has been told by the Great Spirit to prepare for the time when his people will be hungry, and he is now advising them to lay up stores of corn in order to be ready when the famine comes.

—Gen. Custer believed in having martial music on all possible occasions. He would have the band out at five o'clock in the morning and the last thing in the evening. One day when a regiment had just come into camp Gen. Custer ordered the band out. The men were tired and reported that they had lost the mouthpieces to their instruments. "Very well," said the general, "you may take pickaxes and shovels and help repair the roads. You may find the missing mouthpieces while you are working." It is unnecessary to state that the band played soon after.

—The famous novelist, William Black, is described as tightly-built, lithe of limb, strong in the arm, capable of great physical endurance, yet below the medium height. Short black hair, a thick brown mustache, a dark hazel eye, a firm mouth, a square forehead. Black gives you the idea of compact strength—a small parcel, so to speak, well packed. You might sooner take him for an artillery officer who had seen service, a yachtsman, or a man who had spent most of his life in outdoor sports and pastimes than set him down as an author, and particularly as a novelist.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—A good way to ventilate a cellar is to extend from it a pipe to the kitchen chimney. The draught in the chimney will carry away the gasses which would otherwise find their way into the rooms above.

—Breakfast Cakes: Four and a half teacupfuls flour, two teacupfuls milk, one-half teacupful sugar, one egg, one tablespoonful butter, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, and a little salt. Bake twenty minutes.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Chilled Grape Fruit: Cut in halves horizontally and dig the pulp from the fruit. Replace most of it, and sprinkle generously with sugar. Set upon ice until shortly before serving, when add a teaspoonful of orange sorbet to each, and cover the top with pulverized ice.

—Frothed Clams: Drain the clams very dry. Take three eggs, separate the whites and yolks, and stir the clams into the yolks; add salt and pepper. Beat the whites to a very stiff froth. Take up a spoonful and place in it a clam; then drop in hot fat for a moment.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Breakfast Puffs: Beat two cupfuls of flour, one cupful of milk, and one cupful of water together. No salt, no powder, no eggs. Heat the gem-pans, put a bit of butter in each, let it melt and pour in the batter. The butter will rise round it, making greasing the pans unnecessary. There should be one dozen crisp gems.—Good Housekeeping.

—"The nicest material," says a woman who has tried it, "of which to make a bathing suit is alpaca. It sheds the water and holds its own much better than flannel, which becomes waterlogged and floppy. For this summer I am having a suit of dark-gray alpaca, Turkish drawers and Russian blouse, brightening it with quantities of red braid."—N. Y. Times.

—Boiled Asparagus on Toast: Cut off the white hard ends of the sprouts and wash lightly. Then tie in bundles of six each and drop them into boiling water sufficient to cover. Boil about twenty minutes, or until tender; then cut and remove the strings. Have some toast on a platter and carefully place them on the toast lengthwise. Milk gravy may be used as a dressing.—Boston Budget.

—Savory Eggs Fried: Take a dozen hard-boiled eggs, cut them in halves and scoop out the yolk. Mix the yolks with some finely-minced cold veal and ham, mushroom, onion, a little lemon juice, and salt and pepper to taste. Stuff the white halves carefully with this mixture, put the two halves together, tie a piece of thread around them, roll them lightly in egg and bread crumbs and fry to a light brown.—Housekeeper.

—Strawberry Shortkake: Two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one quart of flour. Mix with cold water, work as little as possible, and roll very thin. Put one layer in the pan and spread it with butter, a second one and spread it, and then a third. After they are baked in a quick oven, open and put whole strawberries, which have been sprinkled with powdered sugar, between the layers and on top. Serve with cream.—Demorest's Magazine.

—Sweet Potato Johnnycake: Take one pint of best cornmeal, salt to taste (half a teaspoonful is the ordinary seasoning), rub into the meal a large tablespoonful of lard, next add to it one pint of smoothly-mashed sweet potatoes. If the potatoes are not very sweet, add a tablespoonful of sugar; mix thoroughly to a rather soft dough, but not too soft to handle; have the middle stave of a barrel head washed clean, rinse it, leaving it wet, and on this evenly spread the dough, not quite out to the edges of the board; dip a knife-blade into cold water, and with it smooth over the surface of the Johnnycake, and stick with a fork as you would biscuit; set it before the fire, with a brick or flatiron to support it; let it brown nicely, then loosen it from the board by means of a coarse thread passing between the Johnnycake and the board, close to the latter; do not cook in the oven, but before the fire.—Boston Herald.

NEW STYLES IN HAIR.

The Latest Modes in Coiffures Direct from Paris.

There are three new ways of fixing our hair, all becoming and all simple, but needing the tongs and crimping-pins as important aids and actors in the arrangement if nature has slighted us in her distribution of kinky locks. The first is especially for evening wear, and brings forcibly to mind the love locks and curls of our ancestors.

Wave the hair up from the nape of the neck half way to the crown. This may be done by holding the hair loosely and running the tongs underneath it. Repeat this performance on the side and front locks, excepting a very thin little bang, which should be curled under into little stray natural-looking tendrils on the temples and near the ears. When the hair has been crimped all over gather the ends into a half French twist and curl the long strands, pinning them with invisible hair pins, so that they do not bob about, yet are essentially "la coiffure classique." Bandeau of tortoise shell, gold silver, or a dagger stuck artistically through the hanging curls finishes the effect.

The second way is to wave the hair as in the first, for you can not be fashionable nowadays with a smooth pate. Gather it well to the top of the head in a high loose knot, and run a high-backed comb through the structure. The front locks are carried loosely back, forming a sort of fluffy pompadour, and one solitary lock is made into an inverted question mark, like the little girl in the story, right in the middle of her forehead. This is essentially Frenchy and generally becoming.

The last, which could have no more appropriate name than "the Skye terrier," is, as the term suggests, a mat of crinkly locks, coming quite down to the eyebrows and surrounding the face, even covering the ears, and drawn in a curly mass into a nondescript bunch in the back. We fear the "divine Sarah" is responsible for this arrangement, as both she and the ladies of her company adopt this mode of hairdressing. It is not as ugly as it sounds, and will undoubtedly be adopted by many girls who are constantly seeking for the chic, startling and original. — Philadelphia Press.

—When we seriously attempt to show that a woman who pays taxes ought not to have a voice in the manner in which the taxes are expended, that a woman whose property and liberty and person are controlled by the laws should have no voice in framing those laws, it is not easy. If women are fit to rule in monarchies, it is difficult to say why they are qualified to vote in a republic.—Hon. H. B. Anthony, R. I.

—Prospective Duel in High Life—"Hotspur and Daerdayval had a quarrel at the club last night." "Over Mrs. X——?" "Exactly." "That means bloodshed if they meet." A PHILOSOPHER.

He Took the Gifts That the Gods Had Provided.

"I am very sorry," remarked the wife when the waitress brought in a huge cube of corned beef and placed it on the table, "that we have no mustard in the house."

"It is really terrible," replied the husband, "but come to think of it, we haven't any champagne in the cellar, have we?"

"No," said the wife.

"And I don't suppose we have such a thing as a bottle of pickled walnuts between the roof and the coal bin, have we?"

"No, we have not."

"And I suppose if I were to start at the present moment on a still hunt I couldn't find such a thing as a venison stew from one end of this house to the other, could I?"

"You could not."

"And now, that I think of it, there is no money in the house, is there?"

"Not a cent."

"Nor a bond, nor a share of stock upon which a dollar could be raised at short notice?"

"Not one," said the wife impatiently.

"Then let's try to be happy. If we can exist without champagne, pickled walnuts, stewed venison, money, bonds and stocks, don't you think we ought to be able to pull along without mustard?"

"I think we ought," said the wife cheerfully.

"Then let's try to. I could go all my life without mustard, couldn't you?"

"Yes."

"Then don't apologize any further for its absence. Just try to imagine that there is no such thing as mustard in the world, and think how much worse it would be if we had lots of mustard and no corned beef."

And then they fell to in philosophic silence.—Detroit Free Press.

Agonizing Twists Below the Waistband

Are produced by a drenching cathartic. Why use such an irrational means of remedying costiveness? That pure, botanic, painless, philosophic remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, produces the desired result decisively, but without inconvenience or griping. Dyspepsia and inaction of the liver and kidneys are likewise rectified by this benign restorative of health. There is no finer tonic for the debilitated and nervous. Cures malaria and rheumatism.

The shadows that fill your life, if you're a feeble, suffering woman, can be taken out of it. The chronic weaknesses, functional derangements, and painful disorders peculiar to your sex, can be taken away. The one unfailing remedy for them is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It corrects, cures, and builds you up. It improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep and restores health and strength. For periodical pains, internal inflammation and ulceration, weak back, leucorrhea, and all kindred ailments, it's a positive specific—one that is guaranteed. If it fails to give satisfaction, in any case, the money paid for it is returned.

The great, griping, old-fashioned pills make trouble. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets prevent it. Their's is the natural way. Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Indigestion, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are prevented, relieved and cured. Smallest, cheapest, easiest to take.

"German Syrup"

My niece, Emeline Hawley, was, taken with spitting blood, and she became very much alarmed, fearing that dreaded disease, Consumption. She tried nearly all kinds of medicine but nothing did her any good. Finally she took German Syrup and she told me it did her more good than anything she ever tried. It stopped the blood, gave her strength and ease, and a good appetite. I had it from her own lips. Mrs. Mary A. Stacey, Trumbull, Conn. Honor to German Syrup.

—Several interesting communications are unavoidably left ove r this week.

—Our "Historical facts" do not appear this week but look out for some next week.

—The old R. R. house near Third street crossing is being torn down and moved West.

—A Sociable for the M. E. church benefit will be held on Monday evening at the City Hall.

—Gardens in and about Delano look more like old time Minnesota gardens than they have for years.

--Village orders are a discount until July 1st, when it is expected that funds will again be plenty.

--The Village Council believe in "making hay while the sunshines" and are at it today in Jim Hill Park.

—Read the programme for the 4th of July at Delano, in another column of this paper come and enjoy the day.

—We were somewhat surprised this morning at receiving along with our mail a postal card ordering some beer.

--The patriotic girls of the village are requested to meet at the school house on Saturday June 25, at 2:30 P. M.

—Haynes successor to Jacoby Minneapolis, will remainin in Delano until the 5th of July. If you wish Photographs of yourselves or friends call on him.

—Teachers for the year in the Delano school are Prof. R. C. Dewey, Misses Annie Quinn, Mable Parsons, and Irene Cheeley.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E Church will meet at the home of Mrs. Frazee on Friday afternoon. All are cordially invited to attend, —A competent surveyor could show our village council in a very few hours how to get rid of the surplus water on our streets, alleys and lots. Let us have the civil engineer at once.

—Last week the Eagle in "what people THINK and say" gave an exhibition of her talents as a mind reader and was about as nearly correct as she is on hiring a school assistant principal. As a mind reader the Eagle, if she is honest, is a total failure.

—The jurymen and witnesses are of opinion that considerable red tape is being displayed when each is obliged to make out a seperate bill in order to collect his fees in the Bohn case.

—Some of our citizens would like to know why our village council do not let out to the lowest bidder the placing of Insurance the furnishing of lumber and several other things, to the lowest bidder!

—On receiving news of Clevelands election a move was at once instituted toward securing a higher pole than that old Blaine pole with the Harrison and Reid streamer hanging limp around its top, for a large starspangled banner to float.

—At a meeting of the council held on Monday evening a sidewalk was ordered on lower River Street and on Second Street. An outstanding village Bond was ordered paid. President and Recorder were instructed to attend a meeting at the auditors office and procure a voting outfit. $1,000 more insurance was voted placed on the City Hall. J. C. —Mr. Field, in the interest of the World's Fair fund visited our town this week. He says the apportionment for Wright county is $840 and claims to have secured the signatures of twelve Delanoites pledging themselves to pay $125 if the Legislatnre fails to enlarge its appropriation of $50,000. already made. If enterprising citizens see fit to contribute of their funds well and good but it is rather cheeky to ask them to expend a hundred thousand dollars of the state funds and hire themselves out to work for candidates who will vote to reimpurse them when the legislature is again convened.

Mrs. A. D. Smith and son "Jim" and daughters Hattie and Kittie accompanied by her friend Mrs. Hunter, of Omaha is spending the Summer with her father John Cunningham.

William Kennedy is authority for the statement that Prof. James A. Lewis, Superintendent of Schools for Hennepin county, has almost entirely recovered from the infirmity which laid him up for only a few days in mid winter. Mr. Kennedy pronounces false all reports to the effect that Superintendent Lewis' work during the past two years has been done by others, and says that the people throughout the county have been greatly deceived in this regard by someone seeking an election to the superintendency.

World's Fair Notes.

One of the most interesting exhibits in the Government building at the Worlds Fair will be a display of arms, uniforms, tents and flags in use in the United States army at various times since 1776. This display is being prepared in one of the Gray's Ferry arsenal buildings. A space of 6,000 square feet has been set aside for this exhibit. The uniforms will be draped upon lay figures and arranged in realistic attitudes. The one particular group in which especial pride is taken is to consist of seven figures on horseback, representing a general of the present army and staff. The central figure will be as nearly as possible an exact likeness of Maj-Gen. Schofield. All the articles were made entirely by Americans and of American material. there is a collection of at least twenty-five flags, and these alone are valued at $8,000.

Politics seems to be the leading subject for discussion, at present more especially since Thursday morning when word came that old Grover was placed at the head of the democratic ticket giving democrats a chance to stand by their convictions in good earnest.

A cablegram from London says that original portrait of Pocahontas, painted in 1612, has been secured for exhibition at the World's Fair. The portrait is owned by Eustace Neville Rolfe, of Leacham Hall, Norfolk, who is a decendant of John Rolfe, who Pocahontas married.

The food fish of Wisconsin, which is one of the best fishing grounds in the Union, are to be shown in a fine exhibit at the World's fair. The state commissioners have appropriated $3,000 to defray the expense of preparation of the exhibit.

Tariff is a Tax.
The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

For Governor.
HON. THOMAS WILSON,
of Winona.

WITH Grover Cleveland for President, Thomas Wilson for Governor. Tariff Reform for the battle cry it looks as if Minnesota might wheel into line with several other western states and give a Democratic plurality if not a rousing majority.

PROHIBITIONISTS have placed at the head of their National ticket Gen. John Bidwell, of California.

IF DEMOCRATS will act wisely and place Thomas Wilson at the head of the State ticket for Goyoner they will now have the chance of a generation to win provided they will vote for him as they should themselves. The people have, in Minnesota, as in other States become tired of the administration and desire a change, as is plainly illustrated by the great Alliance vote in our State at the last election. Thomas Wilson is a man now well and favorable known throughout the State and Democrats everywhere will doubtless support him. He is sound on the tariff, the main issue and no one will need fear a good administration with him at the helm.

"CHINA proposes to retailiate for the passage of the Exclusion bill by a wholesale boycott upon American products, especially American kerosene, of which she is a great consumer. If they stop using Yankee petroleum the Chinese can't expect to have any light on the American situation."—New York Press.

If we as a country persist in passing Exclusion bills and Protective tariff bills allowing other nations no privileges of sending their people nor their products to America we must expect to be treated as any miserable individual is. We must expect to be deprived of many things made in foreign lands which we would find it to our advantage and comfort to have. We must not expect so called heathen nations to use us in a more civilized and enlightened manner than we use them.

THE ST. PETER TRIBUNE after eulogizing Ben Harrison and telling what good as a soldier he has done the country asks "members of the grand army, of the Republic veterans of the Union army what say you shall it be Harrison or Cleveland?" Of course the old soldiers have a right to vote for whom they please, and the simple reason that Ben Harrison rose to the position of Brigadier General in the war on account of his bravery at Resaca, is no more reason for his being fitted for the position of President of the United States than was the bravery of thousands of other soldiers, who received no special recognization whatever, from the government, and who can justly lay as strong claims as can Ben Harrison on this line, even if they are Democrats. The man to vote for in this election is the man who represents your principles and is in harmony with your views on the question at issue to-day.

—$100, worth of the finest fire works ever seen in Delano on hand, and to be touched off in the evening of July the 4th.

THE Democratic National Convention held last week at Chicago seems to have terminated more harmoniously than did its predecessor of Republican proclivities recently held in Minneapolis. Instead of choosing the politicians candidate and throwing overboard the choice of the people as did the Republicans at Minneapolis, they on the first ballot, selected as their standard bearer, the man who has received the largest popular vote for president of any man in America on two seperate occasions, and, who bas given the country four years of good honest government, and for whom the whole people cried out, and who four years ago although having the largest number of votes ever cast for one man in the United States, being 95,504 more than Mr. Harrison received in the same election did not get enough electoral votes to replace him in the white house; the man of all others that the American citizen, in all walks of life has learned to respect for his noble qualities and his firm and unwavering stand on reforms, the true Democrat has been chosen by over two thirds of the delegates of a convention of representative Democrats from every State and Territory in the United States as the man most fitted to place in nomination for the highest office in the gift of American citizens. The people can, as they did before, safely trust their government in the hands of GROVER CLEVELAND.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C. June 29, 1892.

Once more the democratic party, in national convention assembled, has made Grover Cleveland, who gave the United States four years of as good gov-ernent as it ever had, its standard bearer; and if there are any democratic doubters of his triumphant election they are not to be found in Washington. Of course there are democrats who individually preferred and worked for some other candidate—democrats have never believed in the suppression of individual inopions—,but now that the candidate has been selected by the convention they purpose to work for his election just as they would have expected every other good democrat to have done for their personal choice had the convention in its wisdom seen fit to have nominated him instead of Mr. Cleveland.

The result of the convention has been decidedly disappointing to the republicans, who had been taken possession of by the idea that it was going to rival the Minneapolis affair in wrangling and in the number of sore heads left. They had also taken up the idea that Cleveland, the man of all others whom they fear the most, would not be nominated. The harmony attending the proceedings of the convention as well as the man nominated has carried consternation into the republican ranks whih has been in a shaky condition ever since Harrison was forced upon them by the brigade of office-holders. So certain are some of the democratic Congressmen that Cleveland will be elected that they are already speculating on the membership of his cabinet.

If the republican Seneators had displayed the same industry in dealing with the appropriations bills eilier in the session that they are now displaying, Congress would not now be in session and if they will keep it up for a while and show a disposition to be reasonable in dealing with amendments to which the house has disdagreed or may disagree to, Congress will be ready to adjourn in about four weeks. This the repnblican Senators have promised to do.

A resoluation has been offered in the Senate authorizing the President to retaliate the proclamation upon Canadian vessels, as long as American vessels are discriminated aginst in Canadian waterways, as Mr. Harrison's communication sent to the Senate this week alleges that they are. As a rule democrats are opposed to increasing the discretionary power already possessed by the president, and they will not suport this resolution, unless upon investagation it shall appear to be absolutely necessary to obtain just treatment for the owners of American vessels which pass through Canadian waterways.

The eloquent speech of Represenative Wilson of west Virginia upon taking the gavel as permant chairman of the Chicago convention, may have suprised many of the delegates, but he has long been regarded here as one of the ablest of the younger democrats in congress. He is probably one of the youngest men who ever presided over a national convention as perminent chairman, and, mark the prediction, he is one of the coming leaders of the democratic party. He obtained his first national recognition when he made the tower of the Northwestern States in behalf of the National Assocation of Democratic Clubs.

Mr. Harrison is finding it difficult to find a man whom he thinks large enought that is willing to accept the chairmanship of the repuplican national committee. The place has been tendered to half a dozen men, including Gen. Horace Porter and Chauncey M. Depew of New York but they have declined the honor. A republecan Senator has asked why these gentlemen declined. "Humph" he replied they rember how Harrison treated Quay, who was cairman of the national committee during the last Campign Clarkson would be willing to serve but Mr. Harrison dosent trust him fully enough and Huston of Indana would be delighted with the place but he is considered entirely too small. Russell Harrison is backing Tom Carter of Montana for this place. The time is growing short as the national commit the will meet here next week to elect a chairman that Mr. Harrison shall select it being a customary courtesy for the committee to allow the nominee to name the chairman.

The Senate amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill have increased the total of that bill more than two millions of dollars.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

During the territorial period of Minnesota, the government of counties consisted of the following officers, namely: A country Board consisting of three commissioners, a Treasurer, a Register of deeds who also performed the duties of County Auditor, the other officers being those of Sheriff, District Attorney, Coroner, Judge of Probate and surveyor. On the first organization of Hennepen county in 1852 these were accompanied by three assessors and one Road Commissioner. Previous to April 1858 there were no township organization in existence in Hennepin county west of Minneapolis and the localities and districts now constituting townships were only known and located by the names of lakes, streams, townsites or the names of certain settlers, who became prominently known partly through their locations being land marks for people travveling through the country, and partly through a public spirit manifested on their part in developing their locality. Township names as applied to townships at present nad no existence then. The writer would however state at this time, that in presenting and arranging these articles he has used the names of townships as they now exist, as a matter of great convenience in setting forth the incidents occuring in districts of country constituting them before the townships were established and named.

On April 10th, 1858 all the territory in Hennepin county lying on the west side of the Mississippi and outside of a part of a Congressional township lying adjacent to the falls of St. Anthony and allotted to the Municipality of Minneapolis, was erected into townships and named by the Board of county commissioners of Hennepin county. Each regular congressional township being designated as far as practicable for a township organization. The fractional congressional townships occasioned by the connection of the two U. S. surveys extended from the 4th and 5th Principal Meridian, and by the three rivers Mississippi, Minnesota and Crow being made county boundaries, were erected into townships by combining and dividing them in such a manner as to accommodate the inhabitants and yet preserve a geograpical symmetry. The western part of Hennepin county., being wholly within the 5th Principal Meridian surveys each regular congressional township or part thereof lying within the county was designated as a township, as follows.

Minnetonka,	Township	117,	Range 22
Plymouth,	"	118,	" 22
Excelsior,	"	117,	" 23
Hamburgh,	"	118,	" 23
Corcoran,	"	119,	" 23
German Home,	"	117,	" 24
Independence	"	118,	" 24

And further, May 11. 1858 was then designated by the county Board as a time for the citizens of each township to meet at a designated place within its limits to organize the township in accordance with the statues of Minnesota and put the township machinery into operation by electing officers and transacting other business pertaining to township organization.

It may be here stated that in the interval between the erection of townships by the county commissioners and their organization on the part of the inhabitants, the Amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota authorizing the state to lend its credit to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars to aid in the construction of land grant railways of Minnesota, granted by act of Congress March 3. 1858, was adopted. The election for that purpose being held April 15. 1858. A large district of country comprising the present towns of Medina, Orono, and parts of Plymouth and Minnetonka voted at Wayzata. Independence voted on the question at the house of James Wilson.

JAMES COPE, of Martin's Ferry, O., has an almanac for the year 1669. It is substantially bound in leather and includes memoranda pages, and was used by the owner of that day in keeping his personal accounts. It contains no patent medicine testimonials, nor was it a medium for working off jokes. The printing is in colors—red and black—and is remarkably well preserved. The book was printed in England, and the writing is as legible as the day it was penned.

THE embezzlements of the present year to date amount to the large sum of $3,895,814. At first sight this would seem to indicate a general disregard of all the canons of honesty and a serious trend of this old world into the ways of evil. But the cloud has its silver lining. As an offset to this financial depravity the donations of generous people to charities of various kinds, in sums not less than $10,000, amount to date to $12,750,500. Thus philanthropy travels four times faster than rascality. It is not such a bad world after all.

A MAN who has had a long experience in marriage gives a St. Louis paper some advice to young men about making proposals. The method he employed was to kneel at the feet of his adored, and, with eyes dimmed with tears, entreat her to marry him. During forty years of wedded life he has had this little episode recalled nearly every day. He has become tired of being reminded constantly of his fault, but his spouse appears to enjoy referring to it better as the years pass by. Now this husband should consider that it gives pleasure to his wife, and not regret what affords her such enjoyment.

THREE THOUSAND deaths from cholera have occurred thus far at Serinagur, in the vale of Cashmere. The city, which is the capital of a district of the same name, contains a population of about 60,000, and hence 3,000 deaths means one out of every twenty inhabitants. This is, of course, a frightful mortality; but cholera seldom does things by halves in India. The wretched sanitary condition of many Indian towns, the ignorance and poverty of the lower classes, the lack of physicians worthy of the name, and a hot, moist climate, all favor the spread of the disease, and make it the scourge of the country.

THE late Dr. Henry F. Formad, of Philadelphia, conducted over 10,000 post-mortem examinations, but not until late in his career did he ever get badly poisoned thereby. He was one of the best known experts in microscopy, a study which he had much to do in introducing into American colleges. He was a Russian by birth, and his own and his father's Roumanian estates were confiscated. The doctor himself got into some political trouble and was sentenced to death. But he escaped and came to the United States in 1876. He then began his medical studies in the university of Pennsylvania.

THE republican national committee in session at Washington elected William J. Campbell, of Illinois, as chairman; M. H. De Young, of California, vice chairman; Thomas Carter, of Montana, secretary; Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York, treasurer, and F. L. Swords, of Iowa, sergeant-at-arms.

A NEW CHAIRMAN.

W. J. Campbell, of Illinois, Selected as the Head of the New Republican National Committee.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Illinois was honored Monday at the Arlington hotel conference of representative republicans of the United States by the choice of W. J. Campbell to be chairman of the national and executive committees during the presidential campaign of 1892. This result was reached after a lengthy conference at the white house between President Harrison, ex-Gov. Cheney, of New Hampshire, and Henry C. Payne, who represents Wisconsin on the national republican committee. Both the latter had been suggested as chairman of the committee, but they felt that they could not give the necessary time to the work and consequently were excused from such a duty. Meanwhile a growing boom was being inaugurated for Mr. Campbell, and at the bare mention of his name there was an expression of opinion that he would fill the bill in every particular. "Tell Mr. Campbell for me," remarked the president to Messrs. Cheney and Payne, "that it is my sincere wish that he should accept this position." When this message was conveyed to the committeeman from Illinois he was for a time undecided whether to accept or not, but a telegram to Chicago fixed all business complications and an affirmative reply was promptly returned to the president's request.

It was 11:30 a. m. when the meeting of the national republican committee was called to order by Chairman J. S. Clarkson. After the roll was called, which showed the presence, either in person or by proxy, of all of the members of the committee, except those from Nevada, Wyoming and Oklahoma, J. Sloat Fassett, of New York, took the floor and placed in nomination Gen. Clarkson as permanent chairman of the committee. Mr. Fassett paid an eloquent tribute to Gen. Clarkson, and said that the days and nights had not been long enough for him to do what he wanted to do for the republican party. With him at the head of the national committee, there could be no doubt of success.

Gen. Clarkson took the floor as Mr. Fassett concluded his speech, and said in substance that he wished to say to the members of the committee that he fully appreciated what had been said by Mr. Fassett and that he felt more grateful to him and to the others of the committee for their kind words than he could express. He had received the personal, individual tender of the support for the chairmanship of the committee of forty-two members of the committee, yet he had learned that the candidate for the presidency preferred another man. He therefore cheerfully declined to be considered a candidate.

At noon the committee took a recess until 3 o'clock, in order that President Harrison might indicate his preference for chairman of the national committee.

The committee assembled at 3 o'clock and Mr. Payne, of Wisconsin, placed in nomination as chairman of the republican national committee William J. Campbell, of Illinois. Representatives of several other states seconded the nomination as one eminently fit and proper and predicting under his leadership complete success for the republican party in November. Mr. Campbell was elected by acclamation.

M. H. De Young, of California, was made vice chairman; Thomas Carter, of Montana, secretary; Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York, treasurer, and F. L. Swords, of Iowa, sergeant-at-arms. A resolution was adopted authorizing the appointment of an executive committee of nine, composed of members of the national committee or others not members thereof, to have the conduct and management of the campaign of 1892. Resolutions commendatory of the efficient work performed by Hon. James S. Clarkson during his term as chairman was unanimously adopted, and Mr. Clarkson spoke briefly in response thereto. Similar action was taken with regard to J. Sloat Fassett and his work as secretary.

PORTO ALEGRE BOMBARDED.

The City in Ruins—Revolutionists Driven Out by Federalists.

VALPARAISO, June 28.—The Brazilian gunboats Camoein and Marjo, under command of Capt. Candido Dos Santos Lara, have arrived at Porto Alegre. The purpose was to overawe the revolutionists. After consultation with Gen. Silva Livades, who was in command of the federal military forces, it was decided to bombard the city.

When the heavy guns of the warsship began to drop shells into the doomed city there was the wildest panic. The revolutionary troops were quickly driven to shelter and the inhabitants, as well as they could, hid themselves from the destructive missiles. Building after building was shattered by the heavy projectiles, and in a comparatively short time the city was in ruins. The parliamentary party made a triumphal entry into Porto Alegro, meeting with little or no resistance. The scene was a dreadful one. The town is in ruins and many dead people were found in the ruins and in the street.

Gen. Livades, at the head of 5,000 federal troops, assisted by a naval brigade from the squadron under the command of Capt. Lara, is preparing for an attack on the Castilhistas, 6,000 in number, under Gens. Isadoro and Pinhero Machado.

A BROTHER'S REVENGE.

He Shoots Down the Betrayer of His Sister as He Leaves the Court-Room for the Jail.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A big crowd of loungers who had come to enjoy the wild excitement of an arson trial saw murder done in the court of general sessions. In sight of the judge, the jury and the crowd, a young man, a cripple, said to be half-witted, shot down the man who had just pleaded guilty of assaulting his sister. He shot the prisoner from his perch among the spectators as two court officers led him to the pen. His aim was true. The bullet struck the betrayer over the heart, and he slipped from the grasp of the policemen almost before they realized what had happened and fell dying at their feet. In the wild confusion that followed a juror fainted. The judge hammered vainly on his desk calling for order. Up among the benches the policemen were scrambling for the murderer, and before the body of his victim had ceased to throb they had him on the floor between them. Other policemen ran in from the hall and the court-room was cleared. An ambulance was sent for and doctors were summoned. Before they came the man was dead. He breathed his last, lying in the empty court-room almost at the door of the pen that had opened to receive him fifteen minutes before.

The man who was shot was Max Clerget, 18 years old. The girl he had assaulted was his sister-in-law, Sarah Divin, aged 15. The man who shot him dead was Edward Divin, Sarah's brother and his own brother-in-law. Edward is a paralytic and not in his right mind. It was a tragedy of low life of the East side tenements. When Clerget was brought into court at 11 a. m. he pleaded guilty. Judge Martine remanded him for sentence until Friday.

The court officers led the prisoner back toward the pen past his victim, the girl he had ruined, and her sister; past the dense crowd of spectators, who sat on the sloping tiers of seats craning their necks to see him, though few of them had heard the charge or knew what it was about. Directly over the aisle sat Edward Divin, the cripple. He had craned his neck forward to hear Clerget plead. Now that he was being led toward him he settled himself back on his seat and followed his every step with burning eyes. Suddenly, as the prisoner and the policeman came directly in front of and below him, the cripple with a quick movement drew a pistol from his hip pocket, leveled it at the prisoner and fired. It was done so quickly that the movement was barely seen by anybody. There was a moment of breathless silence in the courtroom, then a heavy fall, hysterical cries, oaths, wild shouts on the seats, and bedlam. Through it the one intelligible sound was the steady stroke of Judge Martine's gavel as he hammered his desk with all his might. The victim lay gasping on the floor and Divin watched him die. Divin was then dragged from the court-room by a dozen men and turned over to policemen. He was later held to await the action of the grand jury.

LOST HIS MIND.

The Memory of a Murder Committed Twelve Years Ago Drives the Perpetrator Crazy.

PEORIA, Ill., June 28.—An interesting insanity case will be tried in the courts here next Wednesday. Four men brought Luther B. McKinney to the jail Monday morning. He is violently insane and labors under the delusion that he is being pursued by some one who desires to kill him. Twelve years ago McKinney, who is the son of a wealthy manufacturer here, shot and killed Jacob Frye on the street in this city. Frye was a stock commission dealer in Chicago and McKinney had married his daughter. Owing to some family trouble she had left him and returned to Frye's house. McKinney laid his troubles at Frye's door and the men had a violent quarrel that morning. Later on they met and the killing occurred. The subsequent trial created great interest. In the first trial the jury disagreed after being out four days. At the last trial McKinney was released. He was then 30 years old and the man he killed was over 60. The murder has worked on his mind so that it has driven him insane.

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY.

Politicians Looking with Anxiety to the Result of Its Convention to Be Held at Omaha Next Week.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The whole political world is astir to-day and everywhere the greatest interest and earnestness prevail. New York Washington, the silver states, and Chicago are central points of action. All eyes are turned to Omaha in advance of the people's party convention, which meets there next Monday. In that gathering the political leaders of both parties have discovered a new danger. It is feared that a consolidation of the alliance forces, the people's party, and the free silver men will be made strong enough to capture sufficient electoral votes to throw the election of president into the house of representatives, in which event the republicans would have no show, and the people's party might be found in possession of the balance of power. The democrats, therefore, as well as the republicans have taken alarm.

THAT HYENA ROAST.

All Ready For the Judge, But the Landlord Got Left.

As we drove along over a South Carolina highway we encountered a circus menagerie on the move and when clear of it we came upon a dozen men standing around the dead body of a hyena. The animal had died in his cage and had been hauled out on the ground. He was old and faded and his fur rubbed off in spots and the circus people decided that the pelt was not worth taking. The party was about to move on, when up rode the proprietor of a county hotel about four miles farther down the road.

"Look here, gentlemen," he said, when the incident had been explained to him, "would yo' hev any objections to my cuttin' off a hind quarter of that hyena and takin' it home?"

"Of course not, but what can you want of it?"

"Wall, Jedge Ridley, of this circuit, will be along to-day and he will stop with me for dinner. The jedge is a might odd man. He'll ride up to the hoss-block about half past 11 o'clock and sing out:

"'Hello, the tavern!'

"'Wall, jedge, glad to see yo'.'

"'Kin I hev dinner?'

"'Of co'se.'

"'Kin I hev roast hyena for dinner?'

"'Yo' kin. Git right down and come in. I was expectin' yo' and I've got the nicest piece of hyena yo' ever did put yo'r tooth into in all yo'r bo'n days.'

"That's what I want a hind quarter fur," continued the landlord. "The jedge is odd and I want to please him."

He was told to take the whole body if he wanted it, but he contented himself with a quarter, and was in a happy frame of mind as he rode on with us. We were booked to stop at his place for dinner, and we got around there just before the judge and his white mule came into view down the dusty road. All were anxiously awaiting when his honor rode up at a jog trot, stopped at the horse-block and called out:

"Hello, the tavern!"

"Hello, jedge!" replied the landlord, as he stepped out into view.

"Kin I have dinner yere?"

"Of co'se yo' kin."

"I'm powerful hungry."

"Glad to hear it, jedge—glad to hear it."

"And I'm sorter pertickler about my eatin'.'

"Yes, I know."

"I've got my mind made up fur—fur——"

"Reckon yo' hev', judge, an' yo' won't be disappointed," put in the landlord as he grinned and rubbed his hands at the thought of the roast hyena back in the kitchen.

"As I was sayin'," continued his honor, as he slowly dismounted, "I've had my mind made up for some rhinoceros pot pie and bein' as you've got it, I guess I'll stop with yo' while the mewl takes a rest."

We tried to argue the landlord into the belief that life was worth the living but it couldn't be done. He sat down and beckoned for death to come and strangle him.—Philadelphia Press.

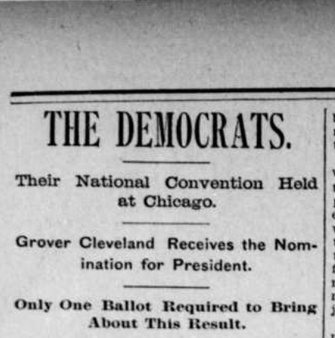
SECOND DAY.

MORNING SESSION.

CHICAGO, June 23.—At 11:30 a. m. Wednesday Temporary Chairman Owens introduced Rev. Alfred H. Henry, of the Methodist Episcopal church, to the democratic national convention, and this gentleman invoked divine blessing. After the prayer the chairman asked if the committee on resolutions was ready to report. At this point he was interrupted by Wichlor, of Minnesota, who moved that Lyman Trumbull and James R. Doolittle be invited to seats on the platform. Motion was carried. At this time Hon. Roger Q. Mills entered the hall, and was met with a round of applause. As it subsided, Johnson, of Ohio, offered a motion extending an invitation to Mr. Mills to occupy a seat on the platform. It was carried with a rousing cheer that shook the rafters of the hall, but that gentleman was taken suddenly ill and compelled to retire to his hotel.

Mr. De Young, of Michigan, moved that Senator Palmer, of Illinois, be requested to address the convention. The motion was carried and



GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. Palmer was conducted to the rostrum where he was greeted with a magnificent burst of applause. Senator Palmer told the convention of the imperative necessity of harmony in the proceeding of the convention. The senator was especially emphatic in the expression of his belief that the party was in duty bound to nominate a democrat whose sterling qualities would command respect from all sources, and the magic of whose name would be a guerdon of success in the fight of next November.

At the close of Mr. Palmer's speech loud cries came from all over the immense hall for Carlisle to address the convention. A member of the Ohio delegation moved that Hon. John R. Fellows, of New York, be invited to address the convention. The motion prevailed, but Mr. Fellows arose in his place and thanked the convention for the honor conferred, but as he was himself a delegate he begged to submit that this was not the time nor place to express his opinions. Later, he said, that he might have something to say.

The credentials committee was then announced as ready to report and John E. Lamb, of Indiana, presented a unanimous report. Sitting Delegate Bernard, of the First Ohio district, was seated; in Utah C. L. Henderson and John T. Cain were seated; in New Mexico and Arizona, the claims of each to seat six delegates were conceded and in Alabama the contesting delegation was given seats on the floor without votes, and Norris and Davis were seated from the District of Columbia.

The committee on permanent organization then reported William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, as permanent chairman; S. P. Sheerin, of Indiana, for permanent secretary, and a list of assistants and vice presidents and secretaries by states. On motion of Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, a committee was appointed to notify Mr. Wilson of his selection to the permanent chairmanship of the convention. The chair appointed as that committee Don M. Dickinson, John R. Fellows, J. M. Duncan, of Iowa; Joseph C. Richardson, of Alabama, and M. L. Cardy, of Missouri. When Mr. Wilson had finally reached the stand, shaken hands with Mr. Owens and Senator Brice, and the escort committee had retired, Temporary Chairman Owens stepped forward and introduced him to the convention. A storm of applause greeted Mr. Wilson, who, after bowing his thanks, spoke as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I thank you most heartily for this honor. I shall endeavor to meet the duties of the high position to which you have called me with the spirit of fairness and equality that is democracy. This convention has a high and patriotic work to perform. We owe much to our party; we owe more to our country.

"The mission of the democratic party is to fight for the under dog. When that party is out of power we may be sure there is an under dog to fight for, and the under dog is the American people. When that party is out of power we may be sure that some party is in control of our government that represents a section and not the whole country; that stands for a class and not the whole people.

"Never was this truth brought home to us more defiantly than by the recent convention at Minneapolis. We are not deceived as to the temper of the republican party. We are not in doubt as to its purposes. Having taxed us for years without excuse and without mercy it now proposes to disarm us of all powers of resistance. Republican success in this campaign, whether we look to the party platform, the party candidates or the utterances of the party leaders, means that the people are to be stripped of their franchises through force bills in order that they may be stripped of their substance through tariff bills.

"Free government is self government. There is no self government where people do not control their own elections and levy their own taxes. When either of these rights is taken away or diminished a breach is made, not in the outer defenses, but in the citadel of our freedom. For years we have been struggling to recover our lost right of taxing ourselves, and now we are threatened with the loss of the greater right of governing ourselves. The loss of one follows in necessary succession the loss of the other. When you confer upon the government the power of dealing out wealth you unchain every evil that can prey upon and eventually destroy free institutions—excessive taxation, class taxation, billion dollar congresses, a corrupt civil service, a debauched ballot box and purchased elections. In every campaign the privilege of taxing the people will be bartered for contributions to corrupt them at the polls. After every victory a new McKinley bill to repay these contributions, with usury, out of taxes wrung from the people.

"The speaker said the people are not ignorant of the meaning of protection—at least of the protection which is doled out to them in the McKinley bill. They see that meaning written large to-day in a prostrated agriculture, in a shackled commerce, in stricken industries, in the compulsory idleness of labor, in law-made wealth, in the discontent of the workingmen and the despair of the farmer. They know by hard experience that protection as a system of taxation is but the old crafty scheme by which the rich compel the poor to pay the expenses of the government. They know by hard experience that protection as a system of tribute is but the old and crafty scheme by which the power of taxation of the people is made the private property of a few of the people.

"Tariff reform means to readjust this system of taxation and to purge away this system of tribute. It means that we have not reached the quality of true freedom so long as any citizen is forced by law to pay tribute to any other citizen, and until our taxes are proportioned to the ability and duty of the taxpayer rather than to his ignorance, his weakness and his patience.

"Gov. McKinley declares that the democratic party believes in taxing ourselves. I am afraid, gentlemen, we must admit this charge. What right or excuse have we for taxing anybody else? With a continent for a country, with freedom and intelligence as the instruments for its development, we stand disgraced in the eyes of mankind if we cannot, and if we do not, support our own government. We can throw that support on other people only by beggary or by force. If we use the one we are a pauper nation; if we use the other we are a pirate nation.

"The democratic party does not intend that we should be either. No more does it intend that they shall falsely call it taxing other people to transfer the expenses of government from the possessions of those who own the property of the country to the bellies and backs of those who do the work of the country. It believes that frugality is the essential virtue of free government. It intends to limit taxation to public needs and to levy taxes by the plain rule of justice and equality.

"But, gentlemen, we are confronted with a new cry in this campaign. The republican party, says Gov. McKinley, now stands for protection and reciprocity. You may explore the pages of burlesque literature for anything more supremely ludicrous than the so-called reciprocity of the McKinley bill. It is not reciprocity at all. It is retaliation, and worst of all, retaliation on our own people. It punishes American citizens for the necessities or the follies of other people. It says to a few little countries south of us: 'If you are forced by your necessities or led by your follies to make bread higher and scarcer to your people, we will make shoes and sugar higher and scarcer to our people.'

"We are for the protection that protects and for the reciprocity that reciprocates. We are in favor of protecting every man in the enjoyment of the fruit of his labor, diminished only by his proper contribution to the support of the government, and we are for that reciprocity that throws no unnecessary obstacle between the American producer and the market he is obliged to seek for his products.

"Whatever can be done to relieve the burdens, to restore, broaden and increase the prosperity of the people and every party of them within the limits and according to the principles of free government, that the democratic party dares to promise that it will do with all its might. Whatever is beyond this, whatever is incompatible with free government and our historic liberty, it dares not promise to any one."

At the close of Chairman Wilson's speech a perfect storm of applause followed, the delegates rising to their feet, cheering and waving flags, hats and canes in token of their appreciation of his remarks. While the tumult lasted Mr. Wilson stood upon the platform surrounded by gentlemen who shook him heartily by the hand and offered their congratulations, Gov. Francis, of Missouri, and Senator Brice being the first to greet him.

The rules of the last national democratic convention were recommended by the committee. Upon motion of Mr. English the committee's report and recommendations were adopted by the convention. The unit rule heretofore in force therefore holds in this convention.

Martin Clardy then sent up a resolution to the chair that the thanks of the convention be tendered to Temporary Chairman Owens for the impartial manner in which he had presided over its deliberations. The resolution was passed by the convention with a shout, and then the report of the committee on rules was read.

The Missouri delegation sent up as a present to the newly-elected chairman a gavel made of zinc, and accompanied it with a short address protesting against any protection that threatened injury to the industries in which this product plays a prominent part. The chair accepted the gavel in a brief speech, thanking the delegation for the present and pledging the democracy to grant the request which accompanied it.

As there were no signs of the committee on platform being ready, Don Dickinson, of Michigan moved that the convention take a recess until 5 o'clock. A storm of nays greeted the proposition, when put by the chair, while the votes in its favor were few and weak, but the chairman declared the yeas had it, in spite of a volley of protests, and at 1:45 the session was adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

At the evening session when the platform had been presented by Senator Vilas, of Wisconsin, the tariff plank was amended so as to make a strong declaration for a tariff for revenue only. The minority report of the committee on resolutions was presented by Mr. Patterson, of Colorado, and consisted in a declaration for free coinage. The minority report was rejected, and the platform as amended was adopted.

Then Chairman Wilson ordered a call of the roll of states for nomination of candidates for president. Grover Cleveland was placed in nomination by Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey. This nomination was seconded by a number of delegates, the principal speeches being made by A. W. Green of Illinois; W. E. English, of Indiana; J. A. McKenzie, of Kentucky; Patrick A. Collins, of Massachusetts, and W. H. Wallace, of Missouri.

William C. DeWitt, of Brooklyn, placed in nomination Senator David B. Hill, of New York. The principal speeches in seconding Hill's nomination were made by Hon. John P. Fellows and Hon. Bourke Cockran, of New York.

Gov. Boies' name was presented by Hon. John M. Duncombe, of Iowa. Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, made the principal speech seconding Gov. Boies' nomination.

Each of the nominations was greeted with uproarious applause, the scenes of wild enthusiasm lasting for many minutes each time. At the conclusion of the nominating speeches a ballot was taken with the following result:

Pattison received 1 vote in West Virginia—1.

When the result of the ballot was announced at 3:20 a. m., the wigwam rang with shouts and cheers for the ex-president. Delegates and spectators were on their feet yelling at the tops of their voices, waving hats, canes, umbrellas, fans and handkerchiefs and exhibiting all the outward signs of unbounded enthusiasm. It was a repetition of the inspiring scene in St. Louis when Mr. Cleveland was nominated for the presidency by acclamation.

The nomination was made unanimous, and the convention adjourned until 2 p. m., Thursday.

THIRD DAY.

CHICAGO, June 24.—Cleveland and Stevenson is the democratic national ticket. The nomination of Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, for the vice presidency was accomplished at the last session of the national democratic convention Thursday.

During the greater part of the last session of the convention a terrific thunderstorm raged. It seemed as if the elements had conspired to disturb the great democratic parliament. Rain beat down on the roof until the speakers could not be heard 10 feet from the platform. Frequent loud peals of thunder shook the building and frightened its occupants. Back in the galleries everything was inky black. The gloom was appalling. Nearly all the lights were grouped in the center of the enormous hall. Beyond the first row of seats behind the delegates nothing was visible. Occasionally the scene would change, a flash of lightning would show through the canvass curtains of the roof and brighten up the galleries, showing rows of pale faces with eyes fastened on the platform. When the crowd in the galleries shouted—and it was shouting all the time—the sound seemed o come from a monster cave.

Chairman Wilson called the convention to order at 2:55 p. m., and introduced Rev. Dr. Green, of Iowa, who invoked the divine blessing. Chairman Wilson announced that nominations of candidates for vice president of the United States were in order. The roll of the states was then called.

Alabama presented no candidate, and Arkansas waived its right in favor of Indiana. John E. Lamb, of Terre Haute, thereupon took the platform and placed in nomination the name of ex-Gov. Isaac P. Gray, of Indiana. Gov. Gray's nomination was seconded by Mr. Vance, of Connecticut; Hon. T. Scott, of Kansas; ex-Gov. Porter, of Tennessee, and by delegates from Idaho, Vermont, Washington and New Mexico.

Through the courtesy of Colorado Illinois was second to respond to a call for nominating speeches. Congressman Nicholas E. Worthington, as representative of the state delegation, named Adlai E. Stevenson, ex-assistant postmaster general under the Cleveland administration. Those seconding the nomination of Mr. Stevenson were Hon. J. S. Rhea, of Kentucky; Elias Kapo, of North Carolina; Mr. Throckmorton, of Texas, and several other delegates.

When Iowa was called a great outcry of "Boies" followed. A delegate arose and announced that Iowa had no candidate, that the wish of Gov. Boies was that his name should not be considered in connection with the vice presidency.

The secretary then called the states of Louisiana, Maine, Maryland and Massachusetts. Neither of them had a name to present for the vice presidential nomination.

When Michigan was called Don M. Dickinson said that his state would present a candidate through Hon. Edwin Uhl. Mr. Uhl took the platform and placed in nomination the name of Hon. Allen B. Morse, chief justice of the supreme court of Michigan. W. F. Vandever and J. H. King, both of Alabama, seconded Judge Morse's nomination.

Montana cast 1 vote for Lambert Tree and Tennessee 1 for Horace Boies. Before the announcement of the result was made all the states changed their votes to Stevenson and he was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

ADLAI E. STEVENSON.

When the state of Wisconsin was called the veteran Gen. Edwin S. Bragg was put forward by his delegation to speak for the democratic party of that commonwealth. Gen. Bragg was called to the platform, and on being presented to the convention by the chairman spoke briefly, nominating Hon. John L. Mitchell, of Milwaukee.

At the conclusion of the nominating speeches the roll of states was called. Chairman Wilson announced the candidates as Isaac P. Gray, of Indiana; Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois; A. P. Morse, of Michigan, and J. L. Mitchell, of Wisconsin. The result of the ballot is shown in the table printed above. Stevenson's election was not opposed owing to the operation of the two-thirds rule.

The vote in detail was:

Indiana presented the name of ex-Gov. Isaac P. Gray and struggled desperately in his behalf. Down through the long list of states and territories the race was neck and neck. New York turned the tide. It cast its 72 votes all for Stevenson. A little later Pennsylvania threw 64 votes for Gray and his friends grew hopeful. When the last territory on the roll had been reached Stevenson was considerably short of the requisite two-thirds. Iowa, firm in its devotion to Boies, had refused to vote for any of the regular nominees. Instead, it gave Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, a complimentary vote of 26.

The situation at the end of the roll call was doubtful. Stevenson had a plurality, but a second vote might break it to pieces. The chairman of the Iowa delegation solved the problem. He arose and changed the twenty-six votes of the state from Henry Watterson to Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois. He did so at Mr. Watterson's personal request. This settled the struggle for the nomination. Delegation after delegation changed its vote until a regular stampede set in. It was ended by Mr. Cole, of Ohio, who moved that Stevenson's nomination be made unanimous. This was carried amid tremendous cheering and waving of umbrellas. Besides Gray and Stevenson two others — Chief Justice Allen B. Morse, the soldier-jurist of Michigan, and John L. Mitchell, of Wisconsin—were nominated for the vice presidency. Morse received a large vote, some of it coming from the southern states. Mitchell got the solid vote of Wisconsin, but very few from any other quarter.

The announcement of Gen. Stevenson's nomination was followed by a repetition of the scenes of wild disorder and enthusiasm which have become so common in conventions of late years. The delegates cheered and the crowd howled. Above the heads of the Tammany delegates swung a big arc light. Some one loosened the rope and it fell between Gov. Flower and Edward Murphy. A general panic ensued. People fled toward the doors and a number of people climbed on the desks of the reporters. The chairman and the officers finally obtained order, and what might have proved a dangerous panic passed off without serious injury.

When order had been secured Gen. Collins offered a resolution, which was referred to the new national committee, with a recommendation that it be adopted:

"Resolved, That the national committee be instructed to provide for its next convention accommodations for the delegates, alternates, national committee and the press, and that all others be excluded."

Gen. Collins made an eloquent speech in favor of the resolution, saying that the proceedings of such conventions ought to be deliberative and great crowds should not be admitted to interfere with the deliberations. The accident near the Tammany delegation proved a clincher to the Collins resolution and it was admitted that it had reason and common sense in its favor.

Votes of thanks were tendered to the committees, the chairman and the city of Chicago, and then amid the music of the band and the cheering of the delegates the democratic convention adjourned. It was at 5:20 o'clock that the democratic national convention of 1892 passed into history.

CHICAGO, June 24.—Immediately after the convention adjourned the committee to notify the candidates of their selection met at the chairman's desk. All but nine states answered. The chairman was authorized to appoint a committee of five to wait upon the president and vice president and find out when they would be ready to receive the full notification committee. A subcommittee of three was ordered appointed by the chairman to prepare an address. It was agreed that if agreeable to Mr. Cleveland the committee will meet him in New York on the 12th of July and formally notify him.

Biographical.

Grover Cleveland was born fifty-five years ago in New Jersey. His educational opportunities were at that time limited, and when 14 years old he removed with his parents to Fayetteville, N. Y., where he began his career as a clerk in a store. Then came an opportunity for Grover to attend a local academy and it was here he received training that later in life led him to adopt the legal profession. Drifting westward, he became a student in a law office at Buffalo, N. Y., and in May, 1859, he was admitted to the bar. His industry and evident ability led to his appointment as assistant district attorney when only 25 years of age. Then followed in sequence of official terms of office his election to the post of sheriff of Erie county in 1870, mayor of Buffalo in 1881, governor of New York in 1882, president of the United States in 1884. His first Waterloo came in 1888, when, nominated for a second term at the white house by the St. Louis convention, he was defeated by President Harrison by 65 electoral votes.

During the earlier part of his administration Mr. Cleveland was wedded to Miss Frances Folsom, of Buffalo, N. Y. The story of how the ex-president wooed and won his bride is somewhat romantic. She was the daughter of Cleveland's former law partner. It is said that Miss Folsom became engaged to Mr. Cleveland about the time he began his term as president. He had always held her in fond regard since the time he trotted her on his knee when she was a little girl. He treasured her picture all through the days of his bachelorhood. Frances Folsom Cleveland added vastly to the luster of Grover Cleveland's administration, endearing herself almost to the extent of being idolized by a large part of the American people. In October, 1891, a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland. They named the child Ruth.

Adlai E. Stevenson.

Adlai E. Stevenson, the nominee for vice president, is a resident of Bloomington, Ill. He was born in Christianson, Ky., October 23, 1835. He attended Center college at Danville, Ky., and when 16 years of age removed with his father's family to Bloomington, Ill., where he studied law and was admitted to the bar. In 1859 he located at Metamora, Woodford county, Ill., and engaged in the practice of his profession, remaining there for ten years. In 1864 he was named as the presidential elector for the district. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington forming a law partnership with J. S. Ewery which still exists. He was elected to congress by the democrats of the Bloomington district in 1874, although the district has always been strongly republican. In 1876 his party again nominated him for congress but he was defeated. He was nominated a third time in 1878 and was elected. He was a delegate to the national convention of 1884 and was appointed first assistant postmaster general by President Cleveland. At the close of Cleveland's administration he returned to Bloomington. In 1877 President Hayes appointed Mr. Stevenson a member of the board to inspect the military academy at West Point. The recent Illinois state convention elected him one of the delegates at large to the national convention. He was serving in that capacity when nominated for the vice presidency.

BURIAL OF DE MORES' VICTIM.

Capt. Mayer's Remains Followed to the Grave by Representative men.

PARIS, June 27.—The funeral of Capt Mayer, who died Thursday night from a wound received in a duel with the Marquis de Mores that morning, was held Sunday afternoon. The coffin and hearse were almost hidden beneath wreaths. A company of cadets from the Ecole Polytechnique, in which Capt. Mayer was a professor, headed the funeral procession. The hearse was followed by a representative of the minister of war, by numerous officers and by a number of men in public life and other notables. An enormous crowd awaited the arrival of the cortege at the cemetery, where the company of which the deceased was commander surrounded the coffin and reversed arms. The grand rabbi of France, M. Kahn, conducted the funeral service. In his discourse at the grave he said he hoped a spirit of mutual toleration, respect and charity would ultimately prevail and writers and newspapers preach unity, not discord and hatred.

CLARKSON WILL RETIRE.

The President Said to Favor Michener, Sewell or Campbell as His Successor.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Members of the republican national committee are arriving preparatory to the meeting Monday. Mr. Clarkson's friends have been quite active trying to formulate plans for his retention at the head of the committee, but he announces that he does not desire to retain the chairmanship. It is understood that the president prefers that the management should be placed in the hands of somebody who has been friendly to his cause, and that he will probably favor the selection of Michener, of Indiana; Sewell, of New Jersey, or Campbell, of Illinois. Mr. Clarkson shows no evidence of bitterness or resentment over the Minneapolis struggle. He says the fight will be made on the issue between the tariff and free trade, and that there will be no mud-throwing during the campaign.

The Harrisburg Disaster.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 27.—Frederick Colberg, of Brooklyn, N. Y., another victim of the wreck on the Pennsylvania road here, died Sunday at the hospital. His wife arrived a few hours before he died and took the body home. Colberg was injured internally. In searching his clothes $6,000 was found in his pockets.

All of the bodies but that of the unidentified young man, supposed to be John Black, of Altoona, have been sent to the relatives. There are at present but eleven out of twenty-eight wounded in the hospital, the others having left. Young Hayes, the operator whose unfortunate judgment led him to violate the rules of the company and permit two trains on one block, is still in jail, prostrated with grief.

Three Boys Drowned.

CHICAGO, June 27.—Three boys were drowned in the town of Lake Saturday afternoon. Frank Schlicht, John Kearns and his brother Cornelius met death while bathing in a pound near a brickyard at Fortieth street, near Leavitt. No one saw them drown, and their fate would not have been known had not their clothes been found and identified by their parents.

Oil Fields Being Developed.

HARTFORD CITY, Ind., June 25.—The Buckeye Pipe Line Company is putting large tanks and an oil pumping station at Montpelier, 9 miles north of this city. The entire oil field is to be fully developed this season. Derricks are going up in every direction and there is greater activity than at any time since oil was discovered in Indiana.

Killed by an Explosion.

NEW ORLEANS, June 27.—A tubular boiler at the Consumers' ice works exploded Saturday, killing one man outright and seriously injuring several others, three fatally.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Common hydraulic cement mixed with oil forms a good paint for roofs and outbuildings. It is waterproof and incombustible.

—Grafton Cake: Five teacupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teacupful of butter, three teacupfuls of sugar, one teacupful of milk and the whites of eight eggs.—Detroit Free Press.

—Bavarian Cream: Dissolve half a box of gelatine in enough water to cover. Let a quart of rich milk or cream, if you have it, come to a boil. Then stir in the gelatine. Set on the back of the stove, and add the yolks of six eggs, one coffee cup of sugar and three teaspoons of vanilla. Add the well-beaten six whites last of all. Pour into moulds.—N. Y. World.

—Amherst Pudding: One and one-half cups sour milk, one teacup of molasses, one teacup raisins stoned and chopped, three-fourths of a cup of currants, three cups of flour, one cup suet, one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls saleratus, a sprinkle of nutmeg, cinnamon, cloves and other spices to suit the taste. Boil five hours. Serve with pudding sauce.—N. Y. World.

—Lyonnaise Potatoes: Put a pint of milk in a frying pan, add a piece of butter, size of a walnut, some salt and pepper; let it boil. Mix a heaping teaspoonful of cornstarch with a little cold milk, and add it to the milk in the pan. Have ready six or seven large potatoes, peeled and cut into small slices, put them into the pan with a little chopped onion and parsley. Cover them with a plate and let them stew slowly for about fifteen minutes. Send to table in a covered dish.—Housekeeper.

—A simple way of cooking eggs is "sur le plat." Butter a flat plate which has been warmed in the oven. Break the requisite number of eggs on it, being careful that they do not touch each other. To accomplish this, the plate should, to receive them properly, have sunken places. An oyster-plate will answer very well to cook eggs in this fashion. There is a metal platter which comes especially for serving eggs in this way. Season the eggs, each one, with salt and pepper, after putting them on the plate, and set them in the oven till the white has set.

—Salade a la Normande: Normandy is famous for its apples and pears, and some varieties of the former blended with the latter make an agreeable fruit salad, which can be as pretty as the cook chooses. One variety of pear, very like the "Bartlett," only not quite so soft, is peeled and cut into thin slices, slices of apples are added, and peeled and stoned plums cut in halves. Add powdered sugar, about three tablespoonfuls of orange water, a dash of vanilla, two or three drops of almond essence, and the juice of a lemon. Let it stand for half an hour, occasionally tipping the dish, and with a spoon pouring over the fruit the sirup formed. Then serve in a glass dish, and decorate with any of the following: lemon or orange leaves and crystalized cherries, or a few fresh plums and some leaves, white oleander flowers, rose-geranium leaves, sprays of syringa, or rose-buds or violets. All of these are delightful in scent, and suggestions to one who enjoys the fruit salad.—Demorest's Magazine.

Gowns of White Fabrics.

India linon, nainsook, linon lawn and dimity are all prettily made with a full skirt, ruffle, full sleeves and deep, close cuffs, with a Russian blouse, round or a full "baby" waist. The trimmings are ribbons and point de Genes lace, which may be had in white or ecru, and is applied as a bertha ruffle, flat yoke, cuffs or waist ruffles, flounces, girdles, in fact, it is put on every fabric in every possible manner. A Russian blouse is imitated with a round waist by wearing a "double bell" skirt, which consists of a bell made in two parts, the upper one reaching nearly to the knees and the lower one to the floor, with each edge trimmed to correspond with the belt, cuffs, yoke, and opening down the left side. Creamy organdies and batists are likewise trimmed with this lace, ribbon belts, and bows or silken girdles. If the possessor of several pretty skirts, woolen or cotton, made a lace jacket and blouse to wear with them, using the black French lace, or the cotton point de Genes.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Fashionable China.

Strictly fashionable china must now be all white. It may have a scolloped edge just tipped with gilt and a gilt band around the inside. But there must be no flowers nor figures upon it, nor should it be decorated in any way. The most elegant of the new china is all white—plain, clear white, with a slightly scolloped edge, the only ornament upon the plate being a monogram upon one side or a single initial. The initial may be done in gold or it may be put on in any color preferred. Those who wish to be especially elegant in their chinaware, and who have a fancy for coats of arms and crests, may have their coats of arms put upon the rim of the plate with the lettering neatly done around it. The lettering consists of the family motto which goes with the coat of arms or crest. If so desired, the crest may be put upon the rim of the plate and the family initial in the center.—N. Y. Commercial-Advertiser.

Drinking Water.

Water is the only real drink, and it is water only which slakes thirst. Nature has supplied the world abundantly with pure fresh water, but man, not being satisfied with it, has sought out many inventions, none of which ever really answer the purpose. Tea and coffee are narcotic drugs and have a very pernicious influence upon the system, and "fire water" is still worse. Milk is a food, and should be taken in small sips as such. The practice of washing down food with several cups of tea or coffee or even milk, is a great hindrance to digestion. If the food is moist no water is needed, but if the food consists mostly of hard crackers or zweibach, a little hot water slowly sipped may be advantageously taken.—From a Lecture by Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

Modish Capes.

Some stylish black silk capes and traveling cloaks are shown. A "Hungarian" model, reaching from neck to skirt hem, is made of black bengaline and lined with black and white checked silk. There are no revers, but the fronts are turned back to simulate them and also to show the effective lining. A three-quarter cape is dotted all over with cut jet cabochons and pendants and trimmed round the neck with a band of black ostrich feathers. Another cape has a very deep second cape of rich black silk gulpure lace, and still another is almost covered with black silk passementerie and black Chantilly lace.—N. Y. Post.

The worst cases yield to its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties. "Cold in the Head," needs but a few applications. Catarrhal Headache, and all the effects of Catarrh in the Head—such as offensive breath, loss or impairment of the senses of taste, smell and hearing, watering or weak eyes—are at once relieved and cured.

In thousands of cases, where everything else has failed, Dr. Sage's Remedy has produced perfect and permanent cures. That gives its proprietors faith to make the offer. It's $500, or a cure. They mean to pay you, if they can't cure you. But they mean to cure you, and they can.

DELANO DIARY

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Come to Delano and hear Judge Canty of Minneapolis on the 4th.

—M. A. O,Hair thinks of taking rooms over the GAZETTE office on the corner of R. R. Ave and 2nd street. A good business corner.

—Delano expects to surpass by odds any former 4th of July celebration she has had and that's saying a good deal, all are welcome to enjoy the day.

—The Delano 4th of July celebration will be one of the grandest ever held here, and we have the reputation of surpassing most villages of our size in this direction.

—The sociable held at the city hall on Monday evening by the Ladies of M. E. Church was well attended. The strawberries were luscious the cake fine and the ice cream good.

—The village council met on Monday as a board of review and sent notices to about sixteen individuals to appear and see why their appraisments should not be changed.

—If you want to get "advise" concerning raising a liberty pole call on Charley Carlton. He intimates that he has received a sufficient quantity during the past week to last for a long time.

—No services were held on Sunday at the M. E. Church on account of the absence of the pastor Rev. J. R. Davies who was attending campmeeting at Annandale. At noon the rain prevented the holding of Sabbath School.

—4th of July Committes are requested to meet at the council room on Saturday evening to complete arrangements and see that nothing is left undone to make Monday the 4th one of the biggest days ever seen in Delano.

—Kelsey boys took a drove of cattle to Minneapolis and back last week through the mud and rain. We understood the authorities refused to allow them driven through town and butchers expected to get them at their own price but failed.

—Yesterday afternoon little Arthur Wiese took a bath at the Watering-trought in connection with the town-pump, and came near breaking his leg The trought tips over nearly every day and should be fixed before some damage suit is brought against the town.

—The street commissioner has had a crew of men to work this week repairing streets for the 4th. He has done some good work but what a pity that a surveyor was not called in to level and establish grades so that the the village could be drained as it ought to be.

—Several of our villagers visited Watertown on Wednesday evening to witness the entertainment. Andrew Hansman was among those to go. "Over the hills to the poor house" he claims it just fine and for a big fat funny darkey E. B. K. takes the cake. This is the entertainment to be given in the Delano city hall on the evening of the 4th of July before the fireworks are touched off.

—John Cunningham and wife had a wet time on Sunday together with Mrs. A. J. Tracy, of Maine, Mr. C's Sister who has been visiting her brother for several weeks. She was to leave Minneapolis for home on Sunday evening so the trio in order to have a good visit and see the country started in the morning to drive by the lakes and soon after the rain commenced coming down and kept them moist most of the way.

—On Wednesday Mr. Cleveland of our neighboring village, Maple Plain, gave several political speeches from his buggy as he drove to different parts of our village much to the disgust of several prominent Republicans who used to count him one of the Stalwarts but much to the amusement of the Democrats who enjoyed seeing the discumforture of those who were unable to reply to Mr. Clevelands solid shot.

—Prof. Hoisington, of Independence was in on Saturday, having fun with some of his old comrades of eight and four year ago, when he was around singing "Blaines got back". He can make them just a little bit madder than anybody else because he knows better where their tender spots are. When they tell him that they have read only one side, the Republican side of the question and have formed their opinions concerning the live issues of the day accordingly, He tells them "just the way I used to do" "I used to think it a sin to read any other than a Republican paper; but I have gotten over that now".

—George Cunningham and Burt St. John are running a regular daily freight line to Watertown.

—Machinery men are having lively times now-a-days. If you want anything in this line consult our advertising colums and call on our patrons before purchasing elsewhere.

—Tiff Hitsman proposes, himself, to show his patriotism by erecting a fifty foot liberty pole of his own in his front yard and at the same time offers to bet $5o that Harrison will be elected.

—That new Cleveland and Stevenson streamer on the Eppel pole floats out to the breezes in fine style and shows the enterprise of the boys as well as the patriotism as exhibited by the stars and stripes.

—One of the finest liberty poles in the county and which is to stand over 100 feet high is being put together and gotten in readiness to raise tomorrow by Democratic workers. Cleveland enthusiasm is at high tide.

—John C. Arup informs us that he takes a Norweigan paper printed in Minneapolis that has a full account of the Democratic convention held in Chicago and hurrahs for Cleveland. John evidently knows where to get the news and is not afraid to read both sides.

The Band Boys wish to have those people understand who say that the Band is using more oil than the whole village put together, they say it is a false idea as the boys only use the hall lamps once a week and that is Wednesday and when the Dramatic club is using the hall where the kick comes from we wish to say that the Band has nothing to do with it and dont wish to say that the Band has nothing to do with it and dont wish to father their doings. ONE OF THE BAND.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON,

of Winona.

WITH Grover Cleveland for President, Thomas Wilson for Governor. Tariff Reform for the battle cry it looks as if Minnesota might wheel into line with several other western states and give a Democratic plurality if not a rousing majority.

IF DEMOCRATS will act wisely and place Thomas Wilson at the head of the State ticket for Goyoner they will now have the chance of a generation to win provided they will vote for him as they should themselves. The people have, in Minnesota, as in other States become tired of the administration and desire a change, as is plainly illustrated by the great Alliance vote in our State at the last election. Thomas Wilson is a man now well and favorable known throughout the State and Democrats everywhere will doubtless support him. He is sound on the tariff, the main issue and no one will need fear a good administration with him at the helm.

THE Carnegie Iron works in Pennsylvania cut down on men's wages and the men who had been so thoroughly made to believe the high protective tariff would not allow this, resisted. Pinkertons detectives were brought to aid the house and a fight ensued in which several on both sides lost their lives.

IT looks to us as if the civil authorities ought to be able to preserve peace in this country without the aid of such organizations as Pinkerton's detectives which are already becoming a menace to the freedom of American citizens. Who knows when he is being shadowed by one of these hired detectives, and for what purpose, and in whose employ. May not the sudden death of some of our prominent citizens be chargeable to the secret methods of this organization, at the instigation of some of these men.

FOR PRESIDENT

Grover Cleveland.

FOR VICEPRESILENT

Adlai E. Stevenson.

THE Peoples party have nominated Gen. Weaver of Iowa for president.

PROHIBITIONISTS have placed at the head of their National ticket Gen. John Bidwell, of California.

EVIDENTLY those Foster people have considerable influence with this administration.—New York Press.

Possibly Benny will be hunting a foster mother after election.

WILLIAM L. WILSON in his speech to the Chicago convention in speaking of tariff, took the proper grounds, that we must pay our taxes and support our own government and not try to make other governments do it for us. He savs "we can throw that support on other people only by beggary or by force. If we use the one we are a pauper nation; if we use the other we are a pirate nation; He rightly argues that we should be neither.

THE Cleveland end of the Chicago ticket represents Democratic reform in theory, while the Stephenson end represents it in practice. The Cleveland end is symbolized by a snow white dove, and the Stevenson end by a spoilsman's ax.—New York Press.

"It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us," is the way, Grover Cleveland is well know to have expressed himself and to have acted on more occasions than one as he is to be the president and see that his theories are put in practice we are to have as the Press symbol would indicate a pure government.

HENRY GEORGE PLEASED.

He Says Cleveland Should Get In by a Landslide.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Henry George is delighted with the Democratic platform and particularly the tariff plank is pleasing to the single-tax champion. He avers that the Democrats will completely oust the Republican candidates and wipe the principals they represent off mother earth's face. In the exuberance of his manner he said: "The only reason for Mr. Cleveland's nomination and the thing that forced his nomination in spite of all the efforts of the politicians was the fact that in the minds of the Democratic masses he represents the idea of free trade. The platform is an unmistakable declaration against all parleying with protection. It puts the Democratic party in the field as committed to the policy of sweeping away every shred of a protective duty. If the Democratic leaders show the courage of their platform and make the campaign an aggressive attack upon the protection robbers I look for the election of Mr. Cleveland, not by a narrow majority, but by a political landside."—Globe.

Tariff is a Tax.

Grover Cleveland says so.

Tariff is a Tax.

Thomas Wilson says so.

Tariff is a Tax.

The Gazette says so.

Tariff is a Tax and every honest man knows it to be so.

Tariff was taken off sugar and lo and behold instead of 14 lbs we can get 20 lbs for a dollar.

Tariff was reduced on binding twine and it is cheaper.

Tariff was taken off of Quinine and and it costs much less than before.

Tariff was raised on tin and now the tinware is of so inferior quality as to necessitate the buying of a new supply quite frequently.

4TH AT DELANO.

Judge Canty's Oration.

Delano celebrated the 4th in splendid style. Everything passed off harmoniously. From early dawn till far into the night the programme was carried out. More people were here than ever before on any occasion. The parade was splendid. The Mayor's welcome short. The Declaration of Independence received justice at the hands of Charles S. Hawker. The singing was well rendered. Music as good as our band could make. Ragmuffins made fun enough to laugh at. Judge Canty's speech good enough for every young man in the country to preserve and give an occasional reading. We give below the most of it.

The Declaration of Independence you have just heard read was made by poor despised common people who fled across the ocean and into the woods to escape from the social, religious and political tyranny of the British aristocrat. The men of 1776 fought to abolish something more than the tax on tea. They fought to abolish that social tyranny from which they had once fled but which followed them to their new found homes where the British snob domineered over them socially as well as politically. The men of 1861 fought for something more than to abolish slavery. They fought to abolish the necessity for standing armies. If the South had succeeded we would be like the nations of Europe where each nation is so close to its neighbors that it has its great cannons sticking out of its house with the muzzles clear in through the windows of its neighbors houses ready every moment to touch the fuse and blow each other out of existance. Each nation must keep a couple of millions of standing army constantly with their guns in their hands and their fingers on the triggers or be wiped off the face of the earth. They call this state of things peace but to us it looks like a mere truce in a gigantic never ending war. If you and I stand covering each other with cocked revolvers each watching for the slightest movement to commence shooting it cannot be said that we are enjoying the blessings of peace with each other. Yet this is the condition of Europe and it would be our condition if these old veterans had not conquered for us a real peace and not a mere truce between us and the South to be broken by still greater wars and greater slaughter.

Our country is now safe and free. The battles of death have been fought, it is for us now to fight the battles of life. If we fight the battle of life as these men fought the battle of death we will not fight in vain. Are we worthy of the men who fought and died for us? If we live for our country as they died for it we will be.

Earlier or later our people have all come the same way from the poor despised serfs of Europe branded by the shackles of social religeous and political tyranny. The European snob ridiculed this hoard of inferior beings but he has ceased to ridicule. Out of this hoard of serfs we have grown more manhood, more wealth, more power, more civilization, more progress, more national character and stability than all the rest of the world in the same length of time and still we are a mere youth on the threshold of life. Where do we get this enormous development? We get it because we have had here the right soil and climate, the right condition for growing manhood and we have grown it as no other nation has ever grown it. The electric current of hope has been coursing through the veins of our common people. When a man has no hope, no faith in the future he becomes a mere beast of burden, he drudges and toils from day to day and lies down at night in despair merely because he would rather live than die. This is the condition of the European laborer. But when a man knows he can "get there" it fills him with hope, with courage, with strength, with determination; he can work 16 hours a day and never get tired; he can suffer hardship that would kill a dozen men because he knows he can succeed.

The poor boy who lives in such an atmosphere who is full of purpose develops his will power in struggling with adversity—develops energy, perseverance, patience, self reliance and strength of character. When the poor is ambitious and filled with the desire to be a man, he gets his will power trained of necessity. If he is made of the right kind of stuff, his struggle for existence hardens and strengthens his will just as it does his muscles. He is the soldier born in camp, bred on the field of battle, suckled at the breast of Hope, fed on the bread of Enthusiasm,—he becomes a tiger in the battle of life.

The rich man's son is rocked in the cradle of wealth and chloroformed with the incense of luxury. His will power slumbers wrapped in his swaddling clothes, he is carried around by his rich nurse until he has grown a full beard. Then he is asked to stand on his feet and walk. Of course he cannot walk or even stand alone. On the threshold of manhood he is still an overgrown infant. To grow will power you must struggle with adversity. To learn to walk you must get down on the ground and try to walk. To learn to swim you must go into the water and try to swim. To learn to fight the battle of life you must get into that battle. You have heard the old saw:—

"Ma may I go out and swim?
Yes, my darling daughter,
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb
But don't go near the water.

The rich man wants his son to learn to swim without going near the water.

He wants him to learn to fight the great battle of life without going into that battle.

The rich boy goes to school and is fed on his lessons like a sleepy babe, is fed sugar and milk with a spoon. He can get his muscles trained in a gymnasium but where will he get his will trained.

It is coming to pass that the accumulation of vast wealth in the hands of the few, is discouraging the many, and men are loosing the hope necessary to win in the battle of life. If you have no courage to fight this battle, no faith in the future, no hope of success then the battle is in vain.

The mountains of wealth piled up by millionaries trusts and monopolies, throw a dark shadow across the path of the poor man, and across the very horizon of our destiny.

It is necessary for the preservation of our institutions and our national vigor, that the poor believe there is a future for them, that the sun of opportunity has not set, that men of braing and strength and caracter will still come up from the ranks of the poorest and humblest and obtain the highest positions of honor, trust and profit.

The men who piled up the vast wealth have all been born and raised poor and they are not leaving anything but dudes and spendthrifts to take their places. In this class of business in which wealth is piled up so fast it requires a degree of skill to hold what is piled up. It is a vast game of poker in which the old man has sat and played all his life and when he dies his boy must take his place and go on with the game and he will lose the pile more rapidly than the old man made it. The great railroad kings and millionaires of the next generation are the barefoot boys who are now running around on the farm.

I was down in Florida last Winter for a few weeks at a time when the wealth of New York is on exhibition—on dress parade at the great hotels in Florida. The sons of the Astors, Sages and other New York millionaires were pointed out to me. In conversation with a gentleman he asked me why it is that the aristocracy of this generation produce nothing but dudes. "There was a time" said he "when the aristocracy produced a great many men of ability, for instance, said he "in the age of Queen Elizabeth." I told him that "in those times the sons of the rich and aristocratic had to spend most of their time in war, in battle, in camp, in the saddle and suffered hardships and privations which made men of them. When they traveled it was through swamps and forests. These fellows get on to a palace car in New York are put into a downy bed shut their eyes and wake up in Florida, are carried to the hotel and loll around here on their cushions where the dude sucks the head of his cane, wears his clothes and exists. How much do you suppose that knock kneed dude exerts himself in a year "Why" he answered "not as much as a man who works for a living will in a day." "Well" I said "Do you suppose you can grow manhood serving your time to the trade of loafer?" Did you ever loaf a couple of weeks and then see how hard it is for you to go to work again? Well suppose you had loafed all your life do you suppose you could make yourself work afterward? No these fellows are in no body's way, their fathers places' will be filled by men who were raised as their fathers were.

We will have railsplitters, tailors, tanners and canal boat drivers for presidents in the future as well as we have had in the past. I talk to you of these things because they concern you. I believe the sons of the poor will own, and run, and rule this country in the future as they have in the past.

Are we worthy of the men who fought and died for our opportunities? If we fight the battle of life as they fought the battle of death we will be and we will not fight in vain. I do not believe that the sun of opportunity has set. I believe it has only just risen. I believe this is still the poor man's country and will bring forth more and greater manhood from the ranks of the poor in the future, than it has in the past. The struggle will be harder but the prizes will be greater. The ship that weathered the storm of slavery, with eleven million of her crew in mutiny, will weather any future storm.

If consolidation goes on until there is but one railroad corporation in the United States, and by bribery, usurpation and extortion it causes the people to rise in their might, they will rise, not as Anarchists and Socialists but as Americans fighting on the line of American principles. If nothing but confiscation will reach trusts and monopolies, to that extent we will have confiscation. Not as Anarchists and Socialists, but as American patriots. If a Standard Oil Company raises its deformed head and winds his slimy folds around each natural product of the earth, we will strike it with the sceptre of confiscation, as we would strike the smuggler in time of peace, or the traitor in time of war. If it is necessary to preserve our liberty, we will strike these trusts and monopolies as we struck slavery—with the marching millions.

Under our simple institutions we have grown manhood as no other nation has ever grown it. In order to preserve our institutions we must continue to grow it in the same way. Manhood is a staple product, it cannot be grown in a flower garden or a hot bed, it must be grown in the open field like these mighty trees where the blasts of winter can strike it as well as the sunshine of summer but where it will have a free soil and free air and a free country to grow in.

It is said that the railway dining cars in this country earn more than the sleeping and baggage cars together.

One of the attractions of the forthcoming world's fair is to be a pyramid of four hundred pianos connected by electricity and manipulated by one woman.

Japanese jugglers are deft smokers. Several of them will sit before a curtain and from the tobacco smoke which issues from their mouths will form a succession of readable letters.

The spread of cholera in eastern Europe is something startling. Several Russian provinces are already afflicted. Germany and Austrian have already taken steps to prevent its spread into their territory.

The death on three successive Fridays of three noted French musicians—Ernest Guiraud, Ferdinand Poise and Jules Duprato—has revived in Paris the ancient superstition about the unluckiness of that day.

According to a computation recently published in a financial journal, the percentage of net dividends returned to the stockholders of street railways in the United States is three times as great as that of steam railways.

Fourteen Chinamen who were arrested at San Diego, Cal., for attempting to enter the country in violation of the exclusion law have been examined by United States Commissioner Ward, who ordered their imprisonment at the Folsom state prison for twenty days, after which they were to be returned to China.

Chrysanthemums eighteen inches in circumference are not uncommon in Australia, and many varieties grown there surpass in size and equal in color the finest exhibited at the flower show. All this is not remarkable, however, in a land where the heliotrope grows to be a good-sized tree and the fuchsia clambers to the second-story window.

It is reported that 127,000 of the 200,000 women who work for a living in New York city support their husbands. If more women in other cities did this there would be fewer declarations that marriage is a failure. Many young men find little pleasure in matrimony because they are not supported in the style to which they were accustomed before marriage.

Mrs. Rebecca Boutwell supports herself by tending a tank for the East Tennessee railroad. She fires up and runs the engine. When it is out of order she repairs it. Previous to her engagement on the railroad this woman took charge of the sawdust at a mill. It had been found impossible for any men to keep the sawdust rolled away. She not only kept the sawdust down, but knitted a pair of socks every day besides.

Italy has in its population a slightly larger number of men than women, differing in this respect from the other European countries. It is, nevertheless, true that a very large proportion of the women of the working classes are found engaged in out-of-door employments, and travelers say that woman does far more than her fair share of the work. There are about eleven million women in Italy, and some two million of them are engaged in industrial occupations, while more than three million labor in the fields.

The city of Quito, Ecuado, has the unique distinction of lying in both the northern and southern hemispheres. There the sun rises and sets at 6 o'clock all the year, and when it is winter in the northern side of the city it is summer in the southern half. Of course, the seasons change, as in all other parts of the world, but the thermometer fails to record any considerable changes of temperature. The climate is remarkably agreeable, and, owing to the great elevation of the place, delightfully pleasant all the year round.

A Scotch-American calls attention to the fact that five hundred and eighty-eight years ago last June the greatest battle of the middle ages was fought when Robert the Bruce, at Bannockburn, with thirty thousand men, defeated Edward II. of England, with more than one hundred thousand men, backed up by Welsh, French and Irish legions. Fifty-four thousand men killed and wounded was the result. Battle ax and spear, bow and arrow, were the weapons, doing more destruction in one short day than the big guns of modern times.

The young German emperor declares that the great desire of his life is to secure and preserve peace at home and abroad. To this end he demands that 60,000 men be taken from industrial pursuits and placed in the standing army. He also favors the increase of the German navy and the strengthening of a large number of fortifications. These acts have caused France and Russia to consider the propriety, and even the necessity, of increasing their military and naval forces, and getting ready for open hostilities. They judge the emperor by his acts, and not by his words.

Rev. Dr. Norcross, of Carlisle, Pa., has received a letter from his brother-in-law, Rev. Dr. Sheldon Jackson, superintendent of missions and government schools in Alaska, dated Onalaska, Alaska, May 23, in which he writes: "We reached here yesterday, eight and a half days from Port Townsend. The Bear is coaling and hopes to get off for the Seal islands Thursday. The Methodist mission is doing as well as could be expected. The reindeer we left here are alive and doing well." The letter was written four days after the alleged massacre at Juneau. The reindeer were imported from Siberia a year ago.

An English general has invented a bullet which is highly spoken of as a humane device. The modern missiles of small diameter, it is found, pass through living animals without producing much pain. This is due to their high velocity. The Englishman's invention consists of a small bullet having a cap or cloak so arranged that it will spread open on striking an obstacle. The high velocity of a small diameter is thus obtained, combined with the wounding qualities of a large projectile. Soldiers have the advantage of being wounded by large bullets passing through them at lightning speed.

Insurance in Minnesota.

Insurance Commissioner Smith in his annual report says that to reduce the number of incendiary fires a law should be passed requiring a close investigation into the origin of all fires. Losses in 1891 exceeded those of the previous year by $1,163,408.46, and the receipts were only increased $249,351.60. He predicts a heavy increase in the rates of insurance unless some precautionary measures are taken soon. The law recently passed authorizing the formation of farmers' mutual fire insurance companies is loose in its provisions, according to the report, and needs to be changed, as at present there is no safeguard for insuring in such companies.

TRIUMPH FOR SILVER.

The Senate Passes the Stewart Free Coinage Measure, After a Stubborn Fight.

Washington, July 2.—The Stewart bill for the free coinage of silver passed the senate at a late hour Friday afternoon by the decisive vote of 29 to 25 after one of the hottest parliamentary battles that the senate has ever witnessed. Seven democrats—Brice, Carlisle, Gorman, Gray, Palmer, McPherson and White—voted with the republicans against free coinage. Eleven republicans, the representatives of the silver states of the northwest, voted with the democrats in favor of free coinage. Senator Hill, of New York, made his first speech in the senate and followed it up by crossing the long-anticipated silver bridge and casting his vote for free silver.

The vote in detail is as follows:

It was just 4 o'clock when Senator Stewart sent to the clerk's desk the bill in its final shape to be read before passage. It read as follows:

"That the owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be coined for his benefit, and it shall be the duty of the proper officers, upon the terms and conditions which are provided by law for the deposit and coinage of gold, to coin such bullion into the standard dollars authorized by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled an act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal tender character, and such coins shall be a legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private.

"The act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'an act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of treasury notes thereon and for other purposes,' is hereby repealed.

"Provided, that the secretary shall proceed to have coined all the silver bullion in the treasury purchased with silver or coin certificates."

There was the usual flood of minor amendments, many of them being merely a matter of proposed changes in verbiage. Senator Carey, a republican, of Wyoming, introduced as an amendment the financial plank of the new democratic platform adopted at Chicago. There was a moment of confusion as the democratic senators whispered together as to their course in voting for or against the amendment. Senator Morgan was the first to relieve the embarassment by moving to lay the amendment on the table. His motion prevailed.

Then came the final vote. It was now 4:30 o'clock, and all attempts at dilatory motions had been abandoned. The senators saw themselves at last face to face with the silver issue and prepared to meet it. A monotonous roll call followed, the usual announcement of pairs and explanations of absentees were made, and finally, a few minutes before 5 o'clock, President Pro Tempore Manderson arose in his seat and announced that the bill for the free coinage of gold and silver had passed the senate by a vote of 29 to 25.

There was an outburst of applause in the gallery, which the presiding officer vainly tried to suppress. The confusion on the floor of the senate became so marked that the senate chamber itself for a few moments resembled the house in one of its wilder moods and it was not until Senator Cockrell (Mo.) threatened to invoke the aid of the sergeant-at-arms to restore order that the senate resumed its usual dignity. Senator Stewart's battle having at last been won, his colleagues, forgetting all differences of the past, crowded around him offering their congratulations.

HALF A MILLION DAMAGE.

Quincy, Ill., July 2.—The river at this point is now stationary at 19 feet above low-water mark. This is 8½ inches higher than it went four weeks ago, and it lacks but 1 inch of the high-water mark of 1881, and 9½ inches of the high-water mark of 1888, in both of which years all the levees above and below here were broken. All the low land on the east side of the river between here and Warsaw, 40 miles north, is leveed. The Lima lake and the Hunt drainage districts are flooded. Crops in those districts are a total loss.

The levees between here and Warsaw inclose 50,000 acres of land. The damage to crops and other property in the Lima lake and Hunt drainage districts is fully $300,000. The damage in the Indian Grave district from deep water and surface water is $75,000, and in the Sny district from the same causes is $150,000. The damage that has been done by high water this year in these four drainage districts aggregates fully $520,000.

Railway Building.

Chicago, July 1.—Railway construction for the first six months of 1892 is estimated by the Railway Age at 1,367 miles, against 1,728 for the corresponding period last year. Estimates for the entire year are 4,000 miles, or possibly 4,200 miles, which was last year's total construction. Excessive rains have delayed track building this year, and later on it is expected it will become more active.

Four Men Killed.

Providence, R. I., July 2.—Four men were killed while at work Thursday laying the stone abutments to a railroad bridge under Broad street in this city. The bank above them caved in completely burying Patrick Sullivan Leroy Libby, Pietro Grande and Pasquale Diorio. The other workmen were partially buried, but were, rescued alive.

Increase in Elgin's Population.

Elgin, Ill., July 2.—The school census just completed gives Elgin's population as 21,163, an increase of nearly 2,000 in one year.

A Veteran's Pension Increased.

Washington, July 2.—The senate has passed the bill, on motion of Senator Palmer, increasing the pension of Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee, to $50 per month. Mr. Palmer stated that Franklin was over 100 years old, and served in Capt. Armstrong's company in the First and Second Ohio militia in the war of 1812.

An Iowan in Luck.

Dubuque, Ia., July 2.—Joseph Brandon, janitor of the Second Presbyterian church, has been notified of the death in England of a relative, who left $2,000,000 to be distributed among his heirs.

GIGANTIC COMBINATION.

Many Iron and Steel Firms in Pittsburgh Consolidate.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 2.—When the clocks tolled twelve strokes at midnight nearly 150,000 workmen, who had toiled almost incessantly during the past twelve months, were out of employment. The scales in force during the past year expired at midnight, and in all mills the proprietors who have not signed the scale for the ensuing year's work ceased entirely at that time. The number of iron and steel mills that closed down is estimated at upward of 400. There are upward of 460 rolling mills in the United States, 425 of which have trains of rolls connected with their establishments. Twenty-five or fifty of these have been idle for some time past. Of the 400 in operation until Thursday night nearly 300 are situated west of the Alleghany mountains. Quite a number of these have signed the scale, leaving about 250 mills, which are at present lying idle. These employ upward of 100,000 men. The number of glass factories which are not in operation is placed at 200 and the men are estimated at nearly 50,000.

The advisory committee of the Homestead strikers met and completed arrangements for the protection of their interests during the wage war. Their organization is thorough and consists of subcommittees on the preservation of order, regulation of the sale of liquor in saloons and protection from outside labor. The rivers will be patrolled and watched day and night. About forty skiffs and the steam yacht Edna are in the service of the men, who guard the bank carefully on both sides of the river. The river patrol is in charge of one man who has considerable experience in such matters and he is assisted by a large number of others. The headquarters of the men will be removed to Eighth avenue, and will be fitted up in a manner to suit all purposes of the association. The saloonkeepers have been requested to regulate their sales and keep all mobs out of their places of business and to close up entirely if circumstances make it necessary. The men are disposed to keep the peace, but if an attempt is made to operate the mills with non-union men there will probably be trouble.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 2.—From this time on the extensive operations in iron and steel formerly conducted under the firm names of Carnegie Bros. & Co., limited, Carnegie, Phipps & Co., limited, Allegheny Bessemer Steel Co. and the Keystone Bridge Co. at the Edgar Thompson furnaces, the Edgar Thompson steel works, Duquesne steel works, Homestead steel works, Lucy furnaces, Keystone bridge works, Upper Union mills, Lower Union mills, Beaver Falls mills, Sciota ore mines, Larimer coke works and Youghiogeny coke works will be carried on by the Carnegie Steel Company, limited. The general offices of the new firm will be in this city, while the branch offices are situated in all the principal cities of the United States. None of the details of the transaction will be made public by the firm at present, and they will wait until the troubles at their works are settled before filing the papers of record. The capital will be $25,000,000. The company will have in its employ upward of 40,000 men.

FIRES IN CALIFORNIA.

Woodland Suffers from a Disastrous Blaze—Two Men Killed—Fields of Grain Burned Over.

Woodland, Cal., July 2.—Fire broke out in a barn here Friday morning and the high wind caused the flames to spread rapidly. Jackson block and Exchange block, containing the opera house, Exchange hotel and a number of stores and offices, were destroyed. A relief engine arrived from Sacramento, but there was a scarcity of water and the flames were not entirely under control till late in the afternoon. The losses will reach $200,000. W. W. Porter and an unknown man lost their lives by falling walls.

Sacramento, Cal., July 2.—Fire broke out in the Haggin grant, a mile south of Antelope, Friday morning. The fire seemed to start in two places, and, fanned by the high north wind, spread rapidly. Fields of grass and growing grain and stacks of hay were swept away. The fire swept over a territory of 6,000 acres and the loss will probably aggregate $100,000. A field fire is raging between Meyhews and Reutlers and fields of wheat and barley are being consumed.

CYCLONE IN NEBRASKA.

The Town of Mason Visited and Much Property Destroyed.

Mason, Neb., July 2.—At 7:30 Friday evening this town was visited by a cyclone. The wind blew from the southwest and the people, who had been watching the threatening clouds, were warned in time to seek places of safety. The residences of J. H. Melville, K. J. A. Payne and J. M. Amber were almost completely destroyed. The Methodist and Baptist churches and the new brick schoolhouse were torn to pieces, and Payne's meat-market building, Jardoff & Elliott's hardware store, Castellan & Hurley's blacksmith shop, Dryfus' livery barn and two unoccupied houses, all on Main street, were destroyed. The damage is about $50,000.

A MUSICAL MELANGE.

Sousa, leader of the Marine band, in Washington, has decided to accept the offer of a syndicate to remove to Chicago and conduct an orchestra there. He is guaranteed a salary of $6,000 a year for five years with an interest in the profits of the organization.

Miss Rhodes, a young and extremely beautiful girl from San Francisco, and a pupil of Mme. Marchesi, of Paris, for some years, recently made a successful debut as a concert singer in Paris, and later appeared for the first time in opera at Florence, with distinguished success.

Fraulein Gabreilla Weitrowetz, who has recently made a successful debut in London, is of mixed Italian and Austrian parentage, and studied violin-playing under Herr Joachim for three years. Since then she has made starring tours through several continental countries.

The novelty of the production of an opera by a woman composer occurred at the Grand theater, Bordeaux, a short time ago. The opera is by Mme. de Grandval. It is named "Mazeppa," and is in four acts and six tableaux. The local critics speak in high praise of the music.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Edwin C. McCabe, who is engineering the movement to make Oklahoma a negro state, was formerly state auditor of Kansas, is almost a white man, and is said to be quite intellectual. There are 20,000 negroes now in Oklahoma, it is stated, and 200,000 are in the south organized for the same destination.

—A portrait of Longfellow, on exhibition at the national capital just now, lacks the white beard so familiar to almost everyone who has ever seen a picture of that poet, and a chorus of protest and lamentation goes up from beholders. It was painted, the initiated say, thirty years ago for Ticknor & Curtis.

—Miss Betsey Trumbull, who died recently at the almshouse in Skowhegan, Me., at the age of ninety-two, was supported by the town from the day of her birth to the day of her death, for, although able to do considerable work, both indoors and out, she was of feeble intellect and unable to take care of herself. Ninety-two years on a poor farm is the longest time on record.

—Octave Thanet is known to her friends as Miss Alice French. Her nom de plume was the result of chance. Octave was the name of her room-mate at school, and had the advantage of being suited to either sex. The word Thanet she saw written or printed on a passing freight car. Miss French prefers the Scotch to the French pronunciation of the word. Miss French lives in Davenport, Ia.

—Mr. Gladstone recently sent his bookseller an order for twenty volumes, which included two books upon the history of the Waldenses, two upon Irish affairs, and one upon the mode of settling parishes in Scotland; lives of Aretin and Lord Bacon, books on solar physics, myths, religion, political economy, and Elizabethan England; a narrative of the Russians on the Amur, and a volume of Eton verse.

—The Castroville Enterprise is owned and edited by Louise E. Francis, and although she is only twenty-two years old, and began her work with little money, she is making a success. She writes everything that goes into her paper, is her own book-keeper, advising agent, and business manager, and once, when her composing-room was disabled, she set type, helped run the press, and mailed the papers herself.

—Col. Ingersoll gave these interesting opinions about literature during a chat with a Kansas City reporter the other day: "The greatest poem ever written on this continent," said he, "is Whitman's poem on the death of Lincoln, entitled 'When Lilacs Last in the Doorway Bloomed.' The greatest novel in our language, and it may be the greatest in any language, is Dickens' 'Tale of Two Cities.' Hawthorne was a great writer, but his style is a little monotonous. Edgar Fawcett is a great poet; his 'Magic Flower' is as beautiful as anything Tennyson has ever written."

—Henry George is just finishing two more books, one upon recent attitudes of Herbert Spencer. Mr. Spencer and Mr. George, by the way, have in common a sort of scientific curiosity and a faculty of minute observation. Mr. Spencer, who for years lived with a family not far from London and usually dined along with whatever guest happened to be present, took a most embarrassing interest in his neighbor's table manners, and asked many singular questions touching whatever struck him as peculiar in the conduct of his fellow diners. Mr. George is nearly as unconventional in his queries of strangers or acquaintances.

HUMOROUS.

—"Were you at the sea shore last summer, Polly?" "Only for a day." "Did you bathe?" "No. Somebody else was using the ocean when we were there."—Harper's Bazar.

—Yeast—"How is your friend Cravin?" Crimsonbeak—"He's not able to get out." "You surprise me! Has he been sick long?" "He's not sick. He's in prison!"—Yonkers Statesman.

—Neighbor—"What a nice big express wagon your papa has bought you." Boy (gloomily)—"I wish he'd got me a little one." "Why?" "I'm 'fraid he'll want me to haul something with this."

—"His attentions to you have been marked, have they not," said the young woman's experienced friend. "Oh, yes. He has never taken the price tag off any of his presents." — Washington Star.

—"He—"Your father does not withhold his consent to our marriage because I am his employe, I hope?" She—"O, no. He says he'll give his consent as soon as you get your salary raised." —Funny Folks.

—Management.—The Girl—"The new boarder thinks he ought to have another pat o' butter with his cakes of mornings." Mrs. Hashcroft—"He don't get it. Give him two cakes instead of three."—Indianapolis Journal.

—Mrs. Van Ogden—"Oh, we poor women! We have to ask for every cent we get." Mr. Van Ogden—"That's where you are lucky; we men would be mighty glad to get it by asking."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

—Wife—"You know those imported pearl buttons that you got for me yesterday, darling?" Husband—"Yes. What about them?" Wife—"I was thinking that it would be so nice if I had some sort of a gown to go with them."—Cloak Review.

—"No," remarked one of the dear creatures on the veranda, "I don't like Emma one bit." "Why not?" asked her friend; "I am sure that Emma behaves herself like a lady." "That's just it; she never does anything to give one a chance to talk about her."—Boston Transcript.

—Distracted Mother—"Oh, sir, my little boy and dog wandered away this morning and I haven't seen them since!" Policeman—"What did he have on, ma'am?" Distracted Mother—"A little red blanket with 'Fido' embroidered on each side. Oh, dear! dear! what shall I do?"—Black and White.

—A small boy was receiving instructions in simple mathematics, and the fond mother asked: "Now, Frank, if you had five oranges, and Aunt Bessie was to ask you for four, how many would you have left?" The youngest thought for a moment, and then answered: "I'd ask Aunt Bessie if she wanted the earth?"

—Indisputable Evidence.—A young woman was trading in a stationer's shop, and the elderly proprietor suddenly asked: "And when does the wedding take place?" "The wedding? Why, you don't think—" the fair customer blushed and hesitated. "Ah, fraulein, when young ladies buy a hundred sheets of paper and only twenty-five envelopes I know there is something in the wind."—Cologne Gazette.

KITTY NEAL.

On a sudden the wind is awake,
And the orchard is snowing—
In clouds from the apple-boughs
The white petals are blowing;
The pease are ready to bloom,
And the clover is growing.

So long by her basket of work
Kitty Neal had been sitting
That a fever danced in her feet
Of desire to be flitting;
And her grandmother close at her side
Was asleep at her knitting.

Ah, what if a lad at the gate
For your coming were waiting?
If the May were just at its prime,
And the orioles mating?
Should a maiden with love in her looks
Be too long in debating?

As still as a bird from the bough,
She is gone from her station.
"Poor Will has been waiting so long!
And to wait is vexation."
Two hearts at her coming beat high
With a loving elation.

So kisses and true-lovers' vows
And white petals were snowing
At the gate of the orchard that day;
Then back to her sewing;
And her grandmother, waking at last,
Never knew of her going.

TRACING A WATCH.

How Mr. Broomberry Unwittingly Made a Discovery.

Broomberry was on his way down town, intending to get off at the Van Buren street station. Just before reaching that point an acquaintance sat down beside him and began to talk about a murder that had been committed just a year before on the north side. Being a city hall man, Broomberry's acquaintance knew a great deal about the murder; he knew old Kloptock, the victim, and in an exceedingly discreet and sunken-voice manner he intimated to Broomberry that he had a pretty shrewd idea as to who committed the deed. By this time the train had passed the Van Buren street station—was just pulling out, in fact, and Broomberry, determined not to miss an appointment, jumped off the train. He looked at his watch a minute later and found that in jumping off he had broken the crystal. He kept his appointment, and then stepped into a jeweler's to get a new crystal.

"Where did you get it?" the jeweler asked when, after completing his work, he handed the watch to Broomberry.

"I got it from a friend of mine. Why?"

"Nothing, only you've got a rare watch, not in value but as to number. About thirty years ago a company of men built a factory at a little town called Romney, in Massachusetts, and began to manufacture watches, but as some sort of disaster befell the concern, only three watches were ever completed, and this is one of them."

"You don't say so," exclaimed Broomberry. "Well, well; and I shouldn't have known of the rarity of my property if I hadn't broken the crystal in jumping off a train this morning. Do you know what I'm going to do? I'm going to trace this watch back to the factory, if I can; and I'm going to write a description of the hands through which it has passed and make a book of it. Won't that be an odd little volume: 'The History of the Watch?' I am much obliged to you, sir. You've given me an idea, and to a man who is so unfortunate as to be compelled to make his living by thinking, an idea is almost a necessity. Ah, but pardon me for not answering your question. I got the watch from Henry Lucas, gave him forty-five dollars for it about two months ago. If the history should be interesting enough to print, I'll give you a copy of it. Good day."

Broomberry called on Henry Lucas. He found his friend absorbed in the work of "running up" figures in an immense book.

"Ah, Broomberry. Sit down."

"No, I haven't time. Say, where did you get this watch? Only three of them made and all that sort of thing. Just want to get the history of it, you know."

"I bought it from a fellow named Martin Kelly."

"Where do you s'pose I can find him?"

"He works in the post office."

Broomberry went to the post office. He had struck a new line of work and was delighted. Mr. Kelly was easily found.

"I got it from Mark Hammonds," said he.

"The deuce you did!" Broomberry exclaimed. "Why, he was the cause of my breaking the crystal this morning. I was talking to him and passed my station, and then had to jump off. I'll go right down to the city hall and see him."

"Where did I get it?" Hammond replied, in a careless sort of way. "Well, let me see. I got it from J. H. McPaal, a big furniture dealer on the West side."

"All right; I'll go over there and see him."

The great furniture dealer, a smooth, well-fed, bald-headed man, was busy in his office when Broomberry entered.

"Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

"I came to ask you about this," said Broomberry, taking out his watch.

"Don't know anything about it, sir. Good day."

"Excuse me," said Broomberry, "but my friend Mark Hammonds, of the city hall, told me that he got it from you."

"Ah, let me see it. Yes, that's so," he added, when Broomberry had handed him the watch; and then, with an air of business, as though he had been rather lax with the ethics of trade and must now, as a recovery of principle, make a show of briskness, he asked: "But what about it, sir—what about it?"

"Nothing, only I should like to know where you got it?"

"Yes, but I am very busy to-day—exceedingly busy, sir. Can't you call some other time?"

"Oh, of course, but it won't take a minute to tell me where you got it if you know."

"Yes, yes, that's so; but I'm extremely busy. Let me see. We took it in part payment of a lot of furniture—from, let me—Stevens," he called.

A man entered and said: "Yes, sir."

"What's the name of that boarding house woman that couldn't, or rather wouldn't, pay for her furniture in money and we had to take a watch? What is her name? Quick, I'm busy."

"Mrs. Caddo, sir; 742 Limbill street."

"Yes, that's correct. Good-day, sir."

Broomberry hastened to the boarding house of Mrs. Caddo. She would have talked an hour about the watch, or by it, either. She would have told of the myriad of trials that come to the widowed keeper of a boarding house, and she did tell of a certain harnessmaker named Sam Haines, who had boarded with her, who was drunk nearly all the time, who positively refused, indeed, in a most insulting manner, to pay his board, but who, after being threatened by the law, and by a certain enormous policeman who knew the widow quite well, consented to give her his watch. This Mr. Sam Haines could be found on Madison street, near Robey.

Broomberry found the harnessmaker drunk and communicative. He got the watch of a certain pawnbroker and would neglect his work to go and show Broomberry the place.

"Oh, no. I can find it easily enough," said the visitor, taking down the number.

The pawnbroker remembered the watch, and, turning to his books, said that it had been sold to him by one H. J. Miles, 426 Rockland street.

Broomberry started out to look for the street and soon discovered that there was no such place. He returned to the pawn shop.

"The fellow that sold you this watch must have come by it dishonestly," he said to the broker.

"Very likely, sir. We have no means of finding out, you know. All we can do is to take the name and address or what we suppose to be such."

"Yes, that's true, I suppose. But do you think you'd know the man if you were to see him again?"

"Yes, I think so."

"Have you ever seen him since he sold you the watch?"

"No, I think not."

"I have," said a boy standing at the back end of the place.

"Good; but do you know where he can be found?"

"I don't know where he stays, but I have seen him go up into a gambling house."

"Well, now, if you will go with me and point him out, I will pay you well for your trouble."

Every day for four days the boy went with Broomberry and stood near a narrow stairway on Clark street, and just as they were about to leave the place on the evening of the fourth day the boy clutched Broomberry's arm and said:

"That's him going up now."

"All right. Here." He gave the boy five dollars.

Broomberry went up into the gambling den; he closely studied the man that had been pointed out. The fellow lost his money and went down. Broomberry followed him. He went to a sort of hotel on Canal street and Broomberry kept him in view. He went into the bar-room and sat down to a table. Broomberry approached him, indiscreetly too, and said:

"Will you please pardon me if I ask you a few questions?"

"I don't know whether I will or not," the fellow growled, but Broomberry, taking no notice of his ill-humor, sat down.

"I am about to write a little history," said he, "and think you may be able to help me out on it. I have in my possession a watch which I have traced to you, and I should like to know where you—"

The fellow jumped up, knocked Broomberry down and disappeared through a back door. When the historian got up and brushed himself, he was told that a policeman had caught the fellow—a singular outcome, surely. The fellow was brought back and then, together with Broomberry, was taken to the police station, where the historian related his story, and then there came a sensation. The watch had belonged to old Kloptock and Broomberry had found the murderer.—Opie Read, in Banner of Gold.

A GREAT RUIN.

What Is Left of the Magnificent Temple of Baal.

There rises a huge wall seventy feet high, inclosing a square court of which the side is 740 feet long. Part of the wall, having fallen into ruins, has been rebuilt from the ancient materials; but the whole of the north side, with its beautiful pilasters, remains perfect. As the visitors enter the court they stand still in astonishment at the extraordinary sight which meets their eyes; for here, crowded within those four high walls, is the native village of Tadmor. It was natural enough for the Arabs to build their mud huts within these readymade fortifications, but the impression produced by such a village in such a place is indescribably strange.

The temple, so to speak, is eaten out at the core, and little but the shell remains. But here and there a fluted Corinthian column or group of columns, with entablature still perfect, rises in stately grace far over the wretched huts, the rich, creamy color of the limestone and the beautiful moldings of the capitals contrasting with the clear blue of the cloudless sky. The best view of the whole is to be obtained from the roof of the naos, which, once beautiful and adorned with sculpture, is now all battered and defaced and has been metamorphosed into a squalid little mosque. To describe the view from that roof were indeed a hopeless task. High into the clear blue air and the golden sunshine rise the stately columns; crowded and jumbled and heaped together below, untouched by the gladdening sunbeams, unfreshened by the pure, free air, lies all the squalor and wretchedness of an Arab mud-hut village.—Blackwood's Magazine.

In the Gloaming.

They had been married fourteen weeks.

"Frank, dear," she said one evening in the gloaming, "would you miss me very much if I should die?"

"Don't ask me such grewsome questions, darling," he protested.

"But would you, dear?" she insisted.

"More than words can express," he said, clutching her hands as if he were losing her even then.

"And, Frank, dear, do you think you could ever find anyone to take my place?"

The whippoorwill's mournful threnody came up from the old fence overgrown with thickets and a bat circled about in the starlit shadows of the night.

"No, darling," he murmured, "but I could try."

And a cloud came slowly up from the hill-haggled horizon.—Detroit Free Press.

A Leap Year Patient.

An unmarried physician was called in to see a young widow. "You are lonesome," said the doctor; "your husband has been dead for some time. I advise you to marry again."

"Oh, doctor, I'll marry to-morrow if you will have me."

"Ah!" muttered the doctor, stepping back and blushing; "you know, madam, that physicians never take their own prescriptions!"—Chicago Journal.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

COLD COUNTRY BARN.

Plan of One That Has Given Fairly Good Satisfaction.

My cow stable, here in Walworth county, Wis., which pleases me fairly well, is in a stone basement eight feet high, the bottom being on a level with the ground, except a bank on one side. The barn is 70 by 30 feet. The stable on the inside measures 67 by 27 feet, and is arranged for 31 cows, besides two box stalls, a mealbin, 6 by 8 by 8 feet, and a space eight feet square for cut feed, which drops from the cutting-room above. The stable has eight outside doors, and is lighted by ten windows, and ventilated by a shaft running to the roof.

The cows face inward, and are fastened in stanchions. Theoretically this is a barbarous method; but I know of no other that combines so many advantages. Stanchions are safe; they economize room; the cows can be kept clean, and do not seem to mind the confinement. They are in three rows—two lengthwise of the stable and one across the end.

The feeding alley is eight feet wide and the distance from the outside wall to the stanchions is nine feet four inches; the floor upon which the cows stand is of plank four feet ten inches in length and the gutters, which are also plank, are eighteen inches wide and three inches deep and the walk between the gutter and wall is three feet.

LAYING THE GUTTERS AND FLOOR.—The ground was first made as level as possible. The gutter was made of two ten-inch planks kept level by placing short pieces of inch boards crosswise under them, every three or four feet. These were let into the earth so that the gutter planks rest firmly on the ground. On the gutter plank next to the wall a two by four-inch scantling is spiked, which makes the backside of the gutter. The space between the gutter and the wall (three feet) is filled with soil and tramped firmly for a walk behind the cows.

A two by four-inch joist is set up edgewise, about six or eight inches from the stanchions a strip of board two inches wide is laid on the inside of the gutter plank. This and the two by four joist are for the floor planks to rest on, and there is one inch slant to the floor.

Before laying the planks for the latter, both sides of the joists and the space to the gutter should be filled, rounding full, of earth, so that each plank, when laid, will have to be pounded to settle it into the earth, so that it will rest firmly upon the supports at each end. This will give a water-tight floor and gutter, and they will last much longer than if air circulated underneath. The gutter is eighteen inches broad, three deep in the front, and two at the back, and will be found much more satisfactory than a narrow one six inches deep, which gives a cow a wrench every time she may step into it. It is also much more convenient to clean. For cleaning the stable we use a long-handled scoop, and generally load the manure directly from the stable on the wagon or sleigh, and draw and spread it either on meadow or land to be planted to corn the following spring.

The feeding alley, with the exception of a trough fourteen inches wide in front of the cows for feeding grain, is elevated about four or five inches.

Were I to build again I would have my barn six feet wider so as to give behind each row of cows space for driving a one-horse cart for cleaning.

As to whether the cows should face each other or stand with their backs to each other, I think cows are social, and enjoy standing face to face.—Charles B. Beach, in Rural New Yorker.

SHEEP SHEARINGS.

AT no time and with no class of stock is it a good plan to wean too suddenly; make the change gradually.

IT is lamentable but nevertheless true, that dogs have more friends among the Texas legislators than sheep.

WITH cheap pasturage, western farmers ought to be able to readily compete with the eastern farmer in raising sheep.

SO LONG as so many are so careless in feeding and dressing muttons for market, there will be a prejudice against mutton.

AS TO whether it is best to sell sheep early with the wool on, or later with the wool off, can only be determined by the prices.

THE flesh of the sheep partakes more of its feed than either cattle or hogs, hence the care necessary in fattening to secure good mutton.

WHENEVER sheep are exposed to conditions that keep the wool wet, especially in warm weather, cotted wool is generally the result.

SHEEP will thrive better with a variety of feed in the pasture as well as when on dry feed, and a pasture seeded with a variety of grasses will give the best results.

THERE is no remedy against sheep killing dogs as safe as that of penning the sheep close to the house every night. It may be some trouble but in many localities it will prove good economy.

THE whole growth of the industry of sheep husbandry is dependent on the health and vigor of the sheep. It follows therefore that the flockmaster should never "let up" in his efforts to prevent disease in his flock. An ounce of preventive is worth many pounds of cure.—Live Stock Indicator.

Milking and Smoking.

When a man milks a cow he should not attempt to smoke a cigar at the same time. A young man out in the country tried it, and got along well enough until he lowered his head and touched the cow's flank with the lighted end of his weed. The next instant himself and cigar were dreadfully "put out." The cow introduced about two tons weight into one of her hind-legs, and then passed it under the milker's jaw. When he ceased whirling round, and the myriads of stars he saw had disappeared, he said farming was the hardest work a man could put his hands to.—Farmers' Voice.

Stay with the Business You Understand and You Will Win.

Every season some stockman feels that he has badly failed in what he is doing. He thinks he would like to try something else. He has lost money in one venture, but proposes to find it again in another. The folly of this is apparent at a glance, if one but considers it. As a rule, treasures are to be found and recovered where they are lost. A sheep breeder remarked some fifteen years ago to the writer that he had lost on sheep, but expected by persistency to recover right where the losses occurred. His anticipations have been fully verified, but his success is partly due to increased experience. In the best of seasons, and with the best stock, one must know a business fairly or must employ skilled help (which is difficult to get) if even moderate success is to be found. We know a young farmer who "grew up" with cattle as a specialty, swine and sheep as auxiliary stock. When his steers are ready for the market and it is dull, he hastens to sell, and makes greater haste to buy "stock cattle" of the best grade, which his discouraged neighbors are selling. His average profits on the two lots of cattle are always satisfactory. Sheep and hogs in equal number with the cattle (where grain is fed) are necessary, as a rule, to secure the full rewards from a stock farm. Now, with abundant grass following the rains, even though low prices have prevailed for some months, it would seem very good policy to keep good growing cattle and care for them properly. In more than a quarter of a century of experience with from twenty to three hundred cattle every year, the writer knows a man who has had but four seasons of losses on cattle and hogs combined. The losses of two seasons were on the hogs alone, occasioned by neglect, when he thought other farm work more important. Losses result a good share of the time from our ignorance and neglect and from lack of systematic business management. That which one knows best, he can do best. Few men past thirty-five years old can leave a line of live stock with which they have had long acquaintance, and take up with profit a class of stock new to them. In cattle, hogs, sheep and horses, in the order named, most farmers find good returns. With nearly equal numbers of each class, there is small risk in the outcome of a lifetime.—Orange Judd Farmer.

LOSS AMONG CHICKENS.

Prevent It by Building the Arrangement Here Illustrated.

It has been usually regarded as a foolish waste of time to count the chickens before they are hatched, though with the modern methods of testing eggs during incubation, such "counting" has become a practical part of successful poultry-raising. But the counting of chickens after they are hatched, two or three times a day, to see if cats, rats or hawks have decimated the brood, and if so, to what extent, is certainly very unsatisfactory work. Chickens allowed to run about at will, even in company with a hen, are pretty sure to grow continually smaller in numbers, not only from the casualties mentioned, but from others that are continually appearing. The care that is thus made necessary is a very considerable part of that which is given to the chicks altogether, and is, moreover, a care that is not necessary. Good management is as profitable here as elsewhere, and one piece of such "good management" is to have such an arrangement as is shown in the accompanying illustration, where the chickens can have a chance to scratch at will in the earth, but are at all times safe from accident. Strips of board ten or twelve feet long are joined at the corners, and the top strung with wire netting. A small opening on one side connects with the coop, which should have a hinged cover. A small door in one of the side strips gives opportunity to feed and water the inmates. Such an inclosure can be moved occasionally to fresh ground, and, if not overcrowded, the broods can be thus kept confined until the chickens are large enough to take very good care of themselves.—Webb Donnell, in Country Gentleman.

Horses Must Have Good Feet.

A good horse can no more stand on bad feet than a good house can stand on a bad foundation. It matters not how beautiful the head and neck, how strong the back nor how clean the limbs, if there is canker in the hoof or unsoundness of any kind about that member the horse is not a good one. For this reason many buyers begin at the feet and pass upwards before making up their minds as to the horse's fitness for service. Ride a horse that flinches with every step and you are in constant sympathy with his suffering, and he is a heartless man who can drive a lame horse and not suffer himself. There are many diseases which are located in the horse's foot, rendering a search often necessary to discover them. A purchaser should, if possible, ride or drive the animal a mile or so, as sometimes these troubles only appear after a little warming up and the cooling off which follows. Be sure of the feet, then examine other points.—Colman's Rural World.

Grown on Three Acres.

A Massachusetts man raised last season on less than three acres of land as follows: Fifteen bushels of green pease, one of white beans, ten of potatoes, eight of popcorn (ears), fifty of red beets, twenty-five of onions, seventy-five of carrots, 600 sugar pumpkins, 1,000 winter squashes, 1,000 horse-radish roots, fifty dozen ears of sweet corn, 2,000 cabbages, six bushels of parsnips, large quantities of sunflowers, one bushel of Rochester rose potatoes from one pound of seed. He says he believes there is big living from a small farm properly managed.

Food for Horses.

It is not the amount of food consumed, but that digested, which keeps the horse strong and plump. I put two quarts of stones the size of small hen eggs in one of my mangers lately. The horse did not digest them—in fact, he did not eat them—but he eats his oats more slowly now because he can't get them so rapidly, and, as a result, digests them fully. It is as easy for an animal to waste food by bolting it as to poke it through a hole in the manger.—Farm Journal.

WHY HE GOT MAD.

The Conductor Was a Patient Man But He Swore.

When the conductor reached the two young women both took out their purses.

The blonde said "Let me," but the brunette said, "No, really I wish to."

The blonde said it was her turn, and the brunette insisted that it was hers.

The conductor was patient.

The blonde said she wanted to get some change, but the brunette protested that it was foolish to break a bill.

The blonde called attention to the fact that the brunette had bought the last glasses of cocoa, but the brunette couldn't forget that the blonde had paid for a box of candy.

The conductor was still patient.

Then both insisted at the same time, and each ended up by saying: "O, well, if you insist, of course you can."

There was a pause during which each looked at the other, and the conductor looked at both.

"I thought you were going to——" began the blonde.

"But you insisted," put in the brunette.

"No, I gave way to you," said the blonde.

"On the contrary I yielded to you," returned the brunette.

The conductor was not so patient.

The blonde said she didn't wish to enter into a dispute over the matter, and neither did the brunette.

"I was anxious to pay," said the blonde.

"So was I," said the brunette.

"But you were so persistent," added the blonde.

"O, well," said the brunette. "It's useless to argue."

Each opened her purse and said: "Here, conductor."

"No, no," said the blonde.

"Yes, really," said the brunette.

The conductor was decidedly impatient.

"You buy some more cocoa and I'll pay the fare," suggested the blonde.

"All right. We'll get it now and go home on the next car."

Each shut her purse and the blonde said:

"Conductor, let us off please."

The conductor swore.—Chicago Tribune.

—Liver, Stomach, and Bowels, by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They do it in just the right way, too—by using Nature's own methods. That's why they're better than the dreadful, old-fashioned pills, with their griping and violence.

But they're better in every way. In size, for instance, and dose. They're the smallest and the easiest to take; only one little Pellet is needed for a gentle laxative—three for a cathartic. They cleanse and regulate the system thoroughly—but it's done easily and naturally. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are prevented, relieved, and cured.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for value received.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 1, 1892.

Mr. Harrison has long been known as a very stubborn man, and by two very conspicious actions, this week, one public and and private he has emphasized his right ot the title. His public act was the nomination of Mr. John W. Foster of Indiana to be Secreaty of State in spite of the protest of leading republicans and in the face of his already having one Indiana man in the cabinet. This is unsatisfactory to the Blaine element for two reasons. First, they believe that Foster's spying upon Mr. Blaine at the instigation of Mr. Harrison, had no little to do with driving him out of the Cabinet and lastly they beleave that it indicates a determination upon the part of Mr. Harrison to give the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court to Attorney-General Miller, although it is not thought that he would dare to do it until after the election. So much for the public act of stubbornness.

What he did in private is of far more interest to democrats and will be a factor not to be overlooked in the defeat of Harrison and Reid. Public opinion having shown so unmistakably its aversity to any revival of the attempt to bring the force bill to the front again, a number of republicans, including several senators who are opposed to the force bill called on Mr. Harrison for the purpose of trying to persuade him that it would be good politics to defer to public sentiment and announce in some unmistakable way that if re-elected he would not use his influence as President to have the force bill passed. He at once assumed his most frigid manner and told his callers that the force bill was the one masure which he intended to see enacted into a law if the republicans controlled the next House.

Owing to the dilatoriness of the Senate in acting upon appropration bills long ago passed by the house it was necessary to pass a joint resolution this week extending to July 15 all of the approiations for the fiscal year which ended yesterday. It is hoped that no further extension will be necessary.

The republican "harmony" about which editors of that party are now writing so much came very near to resulting in an unprecedented occurrence at the meeting of the republican National committee this week. Mr. Clarkson came here with forty-one members of the committee pledged to vote for him for permanent chairman whether he was Mr. Harrison's choice or not and with those pleges in his posession Mr. Clarkson thought he could easily make a bargain with Mr. Harrison by which he could remain at the head of the committee but he was mistaken Mr. Harrison refused to "dicker," and demanded an entire new deal in the management of the committee. This made the forty-one members who had pledged their vote to Clarkson so mad that they actually offered to elect Clarkson chairman and igenre Mr. Harrison's wishes if he would only say the word and Clarkson would have said it quick enough if great outside pressure had not compelled him to swallow his anger and say that in deference to Mr. Harrison's wishes he declines to allow his name to be voted for. Mr. Harrison's man who happens also to be the man for the wealthy Armour beef trust was selected for chairman but the feeling in the committee is more bitter, if such a thing is posible than was feeling left by Mr. Blaine's selection of B. G. Jones to be chairman in 1884. It shows Mr. Harrison's determrnation to make the republican party a Harrison party or to destroy it.

Here is Senator Vest's opinion of the man selceted by Mr. Harrison as chairman of the rebublican National committee publicly uttered on the floor of the Senate: "I affirm here, on my persona knowledge that Mr. Campbell is and has been for years the payed lawyer of P. D. Armour attending to all his law-business; that he followed my beef committee to St. Louis and Chicago advising Mr. Armour and that he is the man who instigated the movement on the part of Armour to refuse to obey the subpoena of the Senate. this man is nothing but a tool of monopoly. Of corse he is at the head of the republican National committee. He is the sort of man to do the work"

Senator Vest did a very creditable piece of work this week when Senator Hale made a silly speach laudatory of the obnixous McKinley tariff law by jumping on that imaginative individual a lot of facts and figures showing how much the American people have to pay out on account of that class law and how little they are benefited thereby, not forgetting the war which Carnegie one of the most protected men in Amarica is now waging aginst his workmen. Hale will rember his knockdown for some time.

It remains to be seen whether the passage of the free coinage bill by the Senate will precipitate another silver war in the House, the chanees rather favor it although many leading members will oppose it not so much becaus of there oppositions to free coinage as because they want to adjorn.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

During territorial times and previous to the establishment of townships on April 10, 1858, Hennepin county was divided into election precincts. in the western part of the county, namely: Excelsior, Wayzata, and Greenwood, at which general elections for county and territorial purposes were held October 14, 1856. The precints were named for the places at which the elections were held.

Concerning the precinct of Greenwood and the general territorial election held at the Beaver House, Greenwood, the facts here set forth are obtained from copies of the records of the proceedings of that occasion, furnished by Martin Conzet.

The regularly appointed Judges of election, George H. Fletcher, Samuel Allen and D. R. Farnham were qualified as Judges of election, following which A. W. Dorman and Thomas R. Briggs were appointed clerks of election, the oath of office was administered to the clerks by G. H. Fletcher, which completed the number of officers, as required by law, and under whome the general election for the year 1856 for the precinct of Greenwood was conducted.

The following is a list of the names of persons voting on that occasion, being 58 in all, viz:. Mathew Taisey, Wm Birker, J. F. Powers, Henry Walker, John Collins, Thomas Astrope, W. C. Gould, J. E. Cathcart, W. R. Edgerton, J. E. Wasson, E. H. Woodruff, Benjamin Burnham, Earl Hoisington, Dan'l Styner Irving Shrewsbury, R. D. McGary, C. C. Banks, Wm. Kissinger, A. G. Sexton, J. D. Young, R. W. Courier, N. G. Leighton, J. N. Hutchinson, L. H. Dorman, J. B. Perkins, Israel Dorman, J. R. McGary, Sam'l Huy, Wm. C. Hawk, H. H. Chandler John Moore, James Quinn, John Hanser, George Patten Wm. Morehead, D. L. Wells, J. B. Edgar, J. W. Quail J. L. Hawes, Kelsey Hinman, Louis Allars, John Gruber, D. R. Farnham, G. H. Fletcher, Samuel Allen, Thos, R. Briggs. A. W. Dorman, Mathias Harff, Mathias Winand, Mathias Jacobs, Adam Hohenstein, John Russell, J. M. Burt, Albert H. Taisey, J. G. Farwell, Andrew Thompson, J. W. Wilson, G. C. Lee.

The foregoing list contains the names of early settlers of the present limits of the townships of Independence, Greenwood, Corcoran and Medina, and as far as the writer has learned up to the present, the general election of 1856 was the first occurence of the kind in that district of country.

The next election occuring in the precincts of the western part of Hennepin county, was that of the ratification of the five million loan amendment to the constitution of the State of Minnesota, occuring April 15, 1858, and previous to the admission of the state under its original constitution,

The polling places and precincts in the western part of the country, for that election were: The Beaver House Greenwood, James Wilson's house for part of Independence, Island City P. O. (Wm. F. Russells place), for parts of the several townships cornering near that place.

The Judges of election for the precinct of Greenwood on that occasion were: A. W. Dorman, N. D. Ferwell, and D. R. Farnham: clerks A. S. Lindsley and Thos. R. Briggs. The result for that precinct was 23 in favor of the amendment to 32 against it. Greenwood township and the northwesterly part of Independence voted at the Beaver House.

About the time that measures were being taken to have Minnesota admitted into the Union, William F. Russell was making herculean efforts to have the State capitol located on the narrow strips of land and peninsulas between Crystal Bay, West Arm and the upper and lower part of Lake Minnetonka, near the present Spring Park R. R. Station, which place was then known as Island City, the name of a P. O. which he (Russell) succeeded in having establish there early in 1859: the mail to that point being supplied from Excelsior P. O. and carried by canoe by his brother Frank Russell.

The projected locating the capital of the new state at Island City awakened considerable interest. Respectable donations of lands on the part of the settlers were offered, and it was claimed by some of its friends, that a considerable portion of the members of the Legislature were favorably disposed toward the project. This was one of the pioneer capital removal schemes, and like several of its successors, it died in its incipiency.

More than one thousand men are now at work on the mammoth Manufacture's building at the World's Fair. The force was recently doubled by order of the Exposition authorities, who concluded that the contractor was not making as rapid progress as was desirable. The authorities are determined that all of the buildings shall be completed in time for dedication in October, and the public may be assured that this will be done. The total number of workmen at Jackson park exceeds 7,000. It will probably be increased to 10,000 or more.

A group of Caribs from the Lesser Antilles, descendents of the cannibal race discovered by Columbus on his second voyage, will be at the World's Fair, engaged in making baskets and in other natives industries.

Again the cable has announced that Emperor William of Germany has decided to visit the World's Fair at Chicago next year. This time the Allgemine Zeitung, a leading paper of Munich, furnishes the information, and claims that it is authentic.

The mineral exhibit at the World's Fair promises to be incomparably finer than any ever before made, either in this country or abroad.

The American ostrich Company has sent to Chicago for exhibition at the World's Fair 30 birds from its ostritch farm at Fall Brook, San Diego county California. The ostritches have been sent on thus early in order that they become throughly acclimated by the time the Fair opens and appear at their best.

A Buffalo, N. Y., man proposes to furnish the World's Fair with an attraction in the shape of a collection of snakes. He claims to be able to show as many as 2,000 different varieties.

It is reported that King Alexander of Servia has decided to visit the World's Fair next year. He is sixteen years old and is the son of the much talked of ex-King Milan and ex-Queen Natalie.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

For Governor.

HON. THOMAS WILSON, of Winona.

WITH Grover Cleveland for President, Thomas Wilson for Governor. Tariff Reform for the battle cry it looks as if Minnesota might wheel into line with several other western states and give a Democratic plurality if not a rousing majority.

THE People's Party have nominated Ignatius Donnelly for Govenor.

Democratic Convention.

A Democratic county convention will be held at the court house in Buffalo, Wright county, Minn., on Friday, 29th day of July, A. D. 1892, at 11 o'clock A. All the voters of Wright county who are opposed to high taxation, who believe in reducing taxes on the necesaries of life to the needs of the government economically administered and who desire to free the agricultural class as well as the laboring element generally from the burden of maintaining manufacturing monopolies and trusts are cordially invited to participate with us.

The towns are entitled to representation as follows: One delegate from every town and one delegate for every forty votes or major fraction thereof cast for Wilson for governor at the last general election, in November, 1890.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Minnesota are called to meet in delegate convention in the city of Minneapolis in the Exposihall on Wenesday Aug. 3. 1892 at high noon for the purpose of putting in nomination canidates for the following state offices towit: Governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, attorney general, three justices of supreme court and nine presidential electors.

We invite to a participation by representation in the delegate convention all voters of this state of whatever prior partisan relations who believe with us that "republican protection is a fraud and a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few" that "the fediral governmenthas no constitutional power to enforce and colect tariff duties except for revenue only;" who demand with us "that the colection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the goverment economically administered." and who think that the removal of the barries of trade is the first great reform and to be accomplished befor other and cognate reforms are entered on. We also ask the co-operation of all those voters who with us oppose "state interference with parental rights of conscience in the edieuation of their children," and who believe that the state has reached the limits of its educational functions when it has provided the opportunies for the edicnation of its youth. We especially invite the aid of those voters of the state who would over throw the present unholy combanation which monoplizse the grrin markets of the state and who would see established free open and competive markets for thi produce of our farms.

The representation in the convention is based on the vote for the democrat candidate for governor 1890 giving oue delegate at large to each county and and one for each 120 votes, or major fraction thereof cast for the sain candidate.

The several counties will be entited to the number of delegates in said convention set opposite their respective names as follows to wit:

P. J. SMALLEY, Secretary.

WE see by some of the Minneapolis papers that Hon B. F. Christleib is again in the field for member of Legislature, Mr. Christleib makes a good man for that place.

WHEN in order that millionair foreigners may make iron and steel rails in our country to undersell those made in other countries to build railroads to bring Indias wheat crops to market in competetion with onr own, it becomes necessary to make forts of the factories and arm them with hired Pinkertons with their winchesters it seems to us it would be good policy for our "operatives to seek farms where they can rise enough and to spare, and sniff the pure free air of heaven unwatched and unmolested amid peace and plenty enjoy life as they cannot under the present regime.

THE war between the operatives in the Homestead Iron and Steel works in Pennsylvania seems to have come to a stand still. The Pinkertons after a battle in which several were killed on both sides, surrendered, and have been returned to their home, Gov. Pattison, of Pennsylvania, has ordered out the State militia 8000 strong and as the laborers do not propose to resist them some kind of a bargain will doubtless be started up and hundreds dependant upon them for a livelihood will have work. Such occurencies as that are to be lamented by the entire world.

ON July 28. the Republican State Convention will be held at St. Paul to place in nomination a state ticket. The candidates for Governor are quite numerous with Joel Heatwold. A. R. McGill, Gid S. Ives and Knute Nelson, in the field. the Norwegian seems to lead more on account of his supposed ability to carry the Scandinavian vote with him than on account of his past tariff record which leaned to democracy and evidently had something to do with leaving him out of the race for nomination by the republican friends. It is about time parties learned to nominate men for their convictions and principles and fitness for office rather than because they have "boodle or belong to some nation. We suppose Knute was an American citizen and entitled to votes for other reasons than because he was a Norweigan.

THE peoples party are passing resolution concerning the advancement in price of 1 cent on Stillwater binding twine. They claim it is a scheme to make out that farmers don't want prison made twine and in the interests of cordage trusts.

THE Carnegie Iron works in Pennsylvania cut down on men's wages and the men who had been so thoroughly made to believe the high protective tariff would not allow this, resisted. Pinkertons detectives were brought to aid the house and a fight ensued in which several on both sides lost their lives.

CROOKS Alliance No. 984, which is mostly composed of American Scandinavians, has passed a resolution denouncing in strong terms the statements made that if Knute Nelson is nominated by the republicans he will draw the Scandinavians into the fold who belong to the Alliance. They will not vote for any man on account of his birth, but will pledge themselves to support a candidate who represents their interests, no matter where he was born.—St Paul Daily News.

IT looks to us as if the civil authorities ought to be able to preserve peace in this country without the aid of such organizations as Pinkerton's detectives which are already becoming a menance to the freedom of American citizens. Who knows when he is being shadowed by one of these hired detectives, and for what purpose, and in whose employ. May not the sudden death of some of our prominent citizens be chargeable to the secret methods of this organization, at the instigation of some of these men.

IF DEMOCRATS will act wisely and place Thomas Wilson at the head of the State ticket for Govoner they will now have the chance of a generation to win provided they will vote for him as they should themselves. The people have, in Minnesota, as in other States become tired of the administration and desire a change, as is plainly illustrated by the great Alliance vote in our State at the last election. Thomas Wilson is a man now well and favorable known throughout the State and Democrats everywhere will doubtless support him. He is sound on the tariff, the main issue and no one will need fear a good administration with him at the helm.

OUR candidate for Governor we are glad is to say, to be coming to the front in good shape. We notice in the St. Paul Globe a few days since that had Hon. Thomas Wilson been allowed two weeks more time he would have been elected. And now comes the news claiming that with Thomas Wilson for Govenor and Mayor Winston for Lieutenant Govenor our ticket would be a strong one. Of course it would. No man with whom we are acquainted can begin to gain friends as can Thomas Wilson by going among the people and advocating his cause as he can do it. Republicans admitted when he was here that his speech was the most fair and manly. He abused no one. And said nothing that he need be ashamed to return and face. All he has to do is to get into the field early and put in his time where most needed. Put him in the field and he will do the rest toward bringing Minnesota into the Democratic fold. In looking over the aportionment of delegates to the next Democratic state convention which is based on the vote for Hon. Thomas Wilson two years ago we find that Wright county is entitled to 19 delegates and is the 5th county in the state in number of votes cast for that candidate for Governor and we believe Wright has as good a right to help select the candidate for Governor as has any county in the state and we believe no candidate would be more acceptable than Hon. Thomas Wilson of Winona,

JUST what the Democratic state convention will do is a matter of considerable conjecture at the present time, owing to the fact that there are several candidates mentioned, and while they are not making an active canvass all of them would accept the nomination, if tendered. Judge Wilson, who ran within 1,900 votes of Gov. Merriam two years ago, is being urged to again enter the field, while the young Democratic blood of the country is red hot for Hon. Dan W. Lawyer of St. Paul, they claiming that he will enthuse in an unparalleled manner. Of course, Mr. Lawyer is not saying anything, but that he would accept the nomination is almost certain. Secretary Smalley, while conversing with Carrington Phelps this morning, was asked whether Judge Wilson was a candidate for the position. He replied in the negitive, but added:

"Judge Wilson will do like any other good democrat and like a soldier; that is, when detailed to duty he will not shirk."

"Will the people's party and democratic party fuse this year?"

"There are no prospects of fusion at the present time."

"Not even on the electoral vote?"

"No, sir; not even on the electoral vote, so far as heard from."

Mr. Smalley here retired. A little later on it was learned that while Messrs. Lawler and Roach and others were mentioned in connection with the democratic nomination for governor and Mayor Winston for lieutenant governor—St. Paul Daily News.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 8, 1892.

The murder of Carnegie's locked-out workman by Pinkerton's mercenaries sent a shudder around the civilized world, and furnished the voters of the United States with an object lesson not soon to be forgotten, showing just what sort of "Protection" the republican legislation gives to the wage-earner. Jerry Simpson aptly said of it: "I hope that the people will now be aroused to the fact that protection only protects the capitalist, who, in this case, builds himself a castle in Scotland where he may enjoy his spoils in peace. "Representative Tarseney, chairman of the house committee on Labor said; "Every one must condemn the employment of merceneries, without the authority of law to kill people. Their presence is a menance to peace, and there ought to be something done to put a stop to such business." Even republicans are found who condemn this crime, although it is one of the outcomes of their party's policy. One of these is Representative Lind of Minnesota, who said: "This employment of armed mercenaries cannot be justified and ought not to be permitted."

Representative Caminetti has introduced a resolution providing for a select committee to investigate this Carnegie business, in order to ascertain why an industry protected to such an extent as that of steel and iron should attempt to reduce it laborerers' wages from 20 to 60 per cent, and why this trust or combine should be allowed to introduce a condition of feudal despotism by hiring armed men to force its employes to accept the reduced wages, and a similiar resolution is before the Senate. The resolutions are timely, and unless there is a great change in the present sentiments of members of Congress a strong one will be adopted. Many believe that the reduction of wages was ordered by Carnegie in the hope of staving off action on the pending bill, reducing the tariff on the entire schedule.

The republicans are in a very demoralized condition, owing to the resignation of Mr. Campbell as chairman of their National committe, whether that resignation was brought about by the publication of ex-Senator Farwell of the statement that Mr. Harrison had once refused to appoint Mr. Campbell to a Federal office because of his being a professional lobbyist, by objections of the trusts for which Mr. Campbell is attorney, or, by reason of the threatened revolt of the republican farmers of Illinois. It may be that all of these things were factors in causing the resignation, or that none of them had anything to do with it, but the fact remains that the demoralization exists in the republican ranks, and political parties, like armies, are always at a disadvantage when they are for any cause even slightly demoralized.

There is a lesson in the present condition of the republican party that will not be lost upon Mr. Cleveland, who will soon select the chairman for the democratic National committee. He will profit by Mr. Harrison's error, and will choose a man for chairman who has the ability to manage a successful campaign, and who is above even the suspicion of being allieed to any of the numerious trusts and combines (fostered by republican legislation, notably the McKinley tariff law), which are oppressing the people of the United States.

Senator Berry, in speaking against Senator Hale's resolution as to the effective differences between the republican policy of "protection" and democratic policy "tariff for revenue only," showed that the first "whereas," which says that never were laborers so prosperious and so well paid, was conspicuously contrary to facts by reading newspaper telegrams concerning Carnegie's lock out. He said that the republican party believed in high taxes and extravagant appropriations, while the democratic party believed in levying taxes for revenue only, and in practicing economy. "But," said Mr. Beery, "the issue of the present campaign, which rises far and above all other issues, is the force bill, to which the Minneapolis convention and its candidate for President are fully committed."

Democrats in Congress believe that the nomination of Weaver will close the career of the third party, as far as the South is concerned, as his speeches when he was a republican—he has been everything—were so bitter against the South that few Southern men will vote for him after reading them, and Southern democrats in Congress will see that the aforesaid speeches are given a wide circulation in that section. Representative Hemphill, of South Carolina, says: "All this talk of any other party except the democratic carrying South Carolina is bosh. Nine-tenths of our people were for Cleveland, and he will carry the State by a larger majority than has been given for years.
